Our plan to publish an edition and facing translation of Van den vos Reynaerde for non-Dutch readers dates back to the first half of the 1990s. But years went by, and it was not until the end of 2004 that we found the time one needs to carry out such a project. At that time, we were also happy to meet in Maria Vlaar an enthusiastic representative of the Foundation for the Production and Translation of Dutch Literature (NLPVF). This organization has financed the translation.

The structure of this book has benefited from the example of several predecessors. Adriaan J. Barnouw – translator of many Dutch texts (among them Van den vos Reynaerde) – published an edition of the Middle Dutch legend Beatrijs for foreign students as early as 1914, which includes a grammar and a glossary. The idea to add an extensive glossary to our edition and translation took shape while using Wendelin Foerster's Wörterbuch zu Kristian von Troyes' sämtliche Werke (5th ed. 1973), later also The Earliest Branches of the Roman de Renart (2001), edited by R. Anthony Lodge and Kenneth Varty.

Thanks are due to our German colleagues Matthias Hüning and Ulrike Vogl, who contributed a chapter on Middle Dutch. Their introduction to Middle Dutch diversity, spelling, pronunciation and grammatical structures enhances the practical value of this volume considerably.

We owe the greatest debt to Thea Summerfield, who skilfully translated Van den vos Reynaerde and our accompanying texts into English. We thank her for the close and harmonious cooperation during the last two years. We cherish the memories of our monthly, all-day-long sessions in which the three of us discussed the exact meaning of hundreds of Middle Dutch lines and their English equivalents.

Finally, we should like to extend our gratitude to colleagues who graciously helped us with this edition. Douglas Kelly commented on the English translation of Van den vos Reynaerde; Peter Field did the same for the Introduction. Keith Busby, Karina van Dalen-Oskam, Marijke Mooijaart and Peter Raedts gave useful advice.

May this edition attract new readers to the undisputed masterpiece of Middle Dutch literature! We welcome all suggestions for improvement.

Introduction

If the Times Literary Supplement were to ask its readers which works they considered to be supreme masterpieces of medieval literature, what would be the result? No doubt the Chanson de Roland would figure prominently, as would the Arthurian romances by Chrétien de Troyes. In all probability Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival and Gottfried von Strassburg's Tristan would also be listed. In addition, Dutch readers of the TLS would be certain to make a case for Van den vos Reynaerde (literally: 'Of Reynaert the Fox'). This Middle Dutch beast epic is famous among specialists, but is hardly known outside the Netherlands and Belgium as a result of the language barrier.

The present edition of Van den vos Reynaerde with its translation into English on facing pages hopes to bridge the gap between this thirteenth-century text and non-Dutch readers. They are likely to find it as fresh and entertaining as it was when it was first written. It will enable them to get acquainted with, for example, the author's composition technique, his lively style, his preference for striking descriptive details, his wit and his deeply cynical outlook on life. Text and translation are accompanied by explanatory notes (to be found at the bottom of the page). A glossary, short introduction to Middle Dutch and suggestions for further reading conclude this volume. First, however, this introduction will discuss the literary tradition of the medieval beast epic and facts known about the author. It will also provide a brief summary and note major features of the tale, the implied audience and the transmission and reception of the work.

1 Literary tradition

Our knowledge of medieval beast literature in western Europe is almost entirely limited to those stories that were written down, initially in Latin, later also in the vernacular languages.¹ No doubt stories about animals will also have been passed down by word of mouth, but very little is known about this oral tradition. This makes it difficult to determine the relationship between the oral transmission of tales and written, literary culture or the extent to which the two traditions are rooted in popular and (Latin) scholarly cultures. Vehement debates about the origins of the western European beast epic have been the result.

As early as the nineteenth century the so-called ‘folklorists’ looked for the answer in folk poetry about animals that either had not been preserved, or had not been recorded until a much later date. This type of poetry was initially regarded by Jacob Grimm as an animal saga, already known by the Germanic tribes, which had developed independently from the classical fables. Later, Leopold Sudre was an exponent of the idea that orally disseminated medieval folk tales featuring animals were based in part on classical fables and Latin monastic poetry. The ‘Aesopists’, on the other hand, detected the direct examples of the Latin and vernacular beast epics from the twelfth and thirteenth centuries in these early medieval written animal stories.²

Lucien Foulet has shown convincingly that the authors of the earliest Old French Renart narratives did, in fact, frequently derive material directly from the Ysengrimus, a Middle Latin beast epic named after the wolf who, in confrontations with the cunning fox Reinardus, is continually worsted. The author of the Ysengrimus, too, creatively recycled a considerable amount of material from classical fables, so that the supposed dependence on folk tales is doubtful, to say the least.³ Although the last word has not yet been said (or written) about the early history of the Roman de Renart and the Ysengrimus, these narratives are clearly essential to a proper understanding of the tradition of which Van den vos Reynaerde forms part. The author of this Middle Dutch beast epic, ‘Willem’, was familiar with at least part of the Old French corpus of texts and used it in the course of his composition. The Flemish poet was by no means exceptional in this. Nearly all medieval beast literature, both in Latin and in the vernacular, made creative use of existing texts.

The literary tradition to which Van den vos Reynaerde belongs, is ultimately, by way of various medieval stepping-stones, based on the Greek fable of the sick lion, ascribed to Aesop. It may well be that Willem did not know this fable in its original form. Nevertheless knowledge of this oldest of all sources is useful. As the paraphrase below shows, a number of motifs in Van den vos Reynaerde have a long and venerable ancestry:

The lion had become old and lay sick in his den. All the animals visited their king, except the fox. Then the wolf took the opportunity to blacken the fox’s reputation with the lion: the fox was said to despise the ruler of all animals and had not come to see the king for that reason. At that moment the fox appeared; he had just managed to overhear the wolf's last words. The lion roared at him, but the fox asked for permission to say something in his defence and said: 'Which of all your visitors has done as much for you as I have? I traversed the whole world in search of a medicine for you – and now I have found it.' The lion commanded him to name the medicine at once. Then the fox said: 'You must flay a living wolf and wrap yourself in the skin while it is still warm.' And when the wolf lay there suffering, the fox laughed and said: 'Rulers should not be angered but be incited to good deeds.' The fable teaches that every sin brings its own punishment.⁴

This fable underwent a number of changes in the western European tradition. The most significant one is that King Lion's illness was gradually replaced by the proclamation of a court day as the reason for the animals to gather.⁵ In the course of the Middle Ages this motif was developed in ever more voluminous writings. In the Middle Latin Ysengrimus, written just before 1150 in Ghent, the court day episode numbers some twelve hundred lines (book III), the Old French Le Plaid ('The Trial') has just under seventeen hundred, Van den vos Reynaerde has double that amount, and in Reynaerts historie ('The History of Reynaert'), the fifteenth-century Middle Dutch adaptation and continuation of Van den vos Reynaerde, this number is doubled again. From the Ysengrimus onwards the animals in the stories are not only the characteristic representatives of their kind, but also individuals. They are given fixed proper names: the wolf is called Ysengrimus, Ysengrin, Ysingrijn, the fox Reinardus, Renart, Reynaert. In addition situations and customs from the contemporary, real world are interpolated and sometimes satirized. It will not be accidental that the monk who wrote the Middle Latin Ysengrimus for a monastic audience, regularly presents the greedy wolf as an abbot and bishop. In Le Plaid and Van den vos Reynaerde the setting is that of a feudal, chivalric society: the wolf and the fox have become barons.

The title Roman de Renart refers to a complex of Old French stories called 'branches', rather than a single text. They have as their subject matter the conflicts between the fox Renart and his arch-enemy Ysengrin the wolf and the other animals in King Noble's realm. The oldest surviving story was probably written about 1175 by Pierre de Saint-Cloud (referred to as 'Perrot'; see p. 15) and relates the origin of the feud: the adultery between Renart and Ysengrin's wife Hersent, and later Renart's rape of Hersent, which led to legal proceedings at the court of King Noble.⁶ This story must have been instantly successful, for between 1175 and 1180 six other narratives about Renart were written by different authors, up to 1205 there were another eleven, and even in the first half of the thirteenth century several more appeared. These Renart branches at first functioned independently (even though they responded to one another), but soon they were collected in compilations. Fourteen complete manuscript compilations are extant, as well as nineteen fragments and manuscripts containing one or more branches, dating mainly from the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Research into the Roman de Renart was long aimed at reconstruction: of the sources, or of the original texts, and of the Ur-compilation on which the compilation codices are based.⁷ In the past few decades more attention has been paid to the diversity of the literary and manuscript forms of the extant branches.⁸

Editions of the compilation manuscripts A, B and C are available.⁹ The most usual numbering of the branches is the one adopted in the edition by Ernest Martin. It is based on the sequence of the stories as they appear in manuscript A rather than on the date of composition. Le Plaid, also known as Le Jugement ('The Judgement') is branch I here. In this verse narrative – a sequel to branch II-Va – the fox Renart faces criminal charges by Ysengrin and Chantecler and is summoned three times. Sentenced to be hanged, he begs for mercy; he promises to better his life and to undertake a journey to the Holy Land. Moved by pity King Noble relents. However, as soon as Renart has left the court as a pilgrim, he maltreats Coart the hare and mocks the king. All the courtiers pursue the fox, who manages to reach Maupertuis in the nick of time.

It is not surprising that, when writing Van den vos Reynaerde, it was this branch I that Willem took as an example. From a literary point of view Le Plaid is one of the most attractive stories of the Roman de Renart, and, probably for that reason, the one surviving in the largest number of manuscripts. The story was also rewritten repeatedly by Old French poets. In Le duel judiciaire (branch VI) the fox stands trial once again for his crimes. This time this results in a judicial duel with Ysengrin, which Renart loses. In Renart médecin (branch X) the fox is summoned by orders of the king, at first by the dog Roonel, later by Brichemer the stag, but in both cases the mission fails through Renart's doing. Not until Renart hears that Noble has fallen ill does he travel to the king's court with Grinbert. There he poses as a doctor and of course knows exactly how the king can be cured: by making him sweat heavily in Ysengrin's skin. It is sometimes difficult to see whether the author has conceived of a new story or presents a new version of an existing story. In two Roman de Renart manuscripts (B and H) Le Plaid contains a passage of approximately a hundred and thirty lines in which Renart's conviction and reconciliation with the king has been completely rewritten. This version particularly distinguishes itself by the detailed account of the barons' consultation that precedes the death sentence and by the role played by Grinbert, here presented as his nephew's saviour.¹⁰

The Middle Dutch author sticks to the broad outlines of the plot of his original, but in the details he goes his own way entirely. This means that, when plots are compared, the suspense factor in these stories no longer lies in the question if the fox will manage to keep out of the clutches of the king and his courtiers, but rather how that is achieved. This applies to us, the modern readers, and must also have been true for Willem's audience, in so far as it was familiar with other animal stories (see pp. 31-33). In comparison with Le Plaid and the other branches set during a court day, Van den vos Reynaerde distinguishes itself in particular by the superior manner of the Flemish fox's escape from execution. In Le Plaid King Noble takes pity on the fox and pardons him, which may be generous, but is hardly convincing from a psychological point of view. In Willem's poem the fox plays on Nobel's greed by weaving a brilliant concoction of lies. He misleads the king with the story of his unhappy childhood and by casually mentioning a treasure and a conspiracy to kill King Nobel. Even Reynaert's own relatives are said to have been involved in that plot. Next he gives a detailed description of the place where the treasure is to be found, which is confirmed by Cuwaert the hare, capping the deception by the tale of his excommunication which will enable him to flee the court as a pilgrim. A mere promise of profit – and nothing more substantial – is sufficient ground for Nobel to be reconciled with Reynaert. The French king may have been sentimental, the Flemish king proves to be immoral. This is also the reason why the reputation of the court is tarnished far worse at the end of Willem's poem than it is in Le Plaid.

Willem may have known the Ysengrimus, which was probably written in Ghent in 1148-1149, in other words, in roughly the same location as where, a century later, Van den vos Reynaerde was composed.¹¹ In this cleverly compiled Latin poem of more than 10 For the rewritten passage in branch I in mss B and H, compare lines 1339-1478 in the Roques edition (1948-1963) to lines 1313-1418 in the edition by Martin 1882-1887.

11 For an edition of the Ysengrimus (Latin text and English translation and commentary), see Mann 1987. A verse translation in Dutch was published in Van Mierlo 1946; see also the more recent prose translation by Nieuwenhuis (1997).

6,500 lines, divided into seven books, the greedy wolf takes centre stage. The best supporting role for a male character is for the fox, his enemy and evil counsellor. Their confrontations are primarily verbal in character, with Reinardus' illusory reality dominating that of the wolf. As a result Ysengrimus allows himself to be manipulated and, back in the real world, is severely punished for his credulity. He is repeatedly seriously wounded, is flayed to cure the sick king and is eventually torn apart by a herd of wild pigs.¹²

The literary tradition of writings about animals comprises not only the narrative, fictional beast epic – including the fable¹³ – but also scientific writings about animals. In both categories animals are described not for their own sake, but to transmit a deeper meaning. Whereas in the beast epic the animals are authorial creations, meant to provide a moralising representation of human life, animals in Latin bestiaries or 'books of beasts' are seen as natural phenomena, in accordance with the medieval view that the created, transitory world refers to God's real, eternal world.¹⁴ The outer characteristics and behaviour of the animals is interpreted allegorically. In this way they provide medieval mankind with lessons about God and the devil, about heaven and hell, about virtue and sin. In works on natural history – as in De naturis rerum by Thomas of Cantimpré, translated and adapted by the thirteenth-century Flemish author Jacob van Maerlant in his Der naturen bloeme – there is more emphasis on zoological knowledge. Information of this kind was not usually, however, the result of personal observation, but was derived from such authorities as the philosopher Aristotle (384–322 BC), who in the Middle Ages was seen as the greatest scholar of all time, Pliny (23/24–79), the Roman military commander, procurator and writer, and the archbishop and encyclopedist Isidore of Seville (ca. 565–636).¹⁵

2 The author

In Van den vos Reynaerde we meet a self-confident poet. He uses the first line of the prologue to state his name, Willem, and the title of an earlier work, Madocke: he is Willem die Madocke maecte ('Willem who made Maddock'). At the end of the poem he again incorporates his first name by means of an acrostic, using the first letter of each of the last nine lines: BI WILLEME (3461–69). The two references to his name will have served to recommend the work to his audience; however, for the modern reader 15 Bestiaries and encyclopedias (among them Maerlant's Der naturen bloeme) are discussed in Wackers 1986, section 2.3; Bouwman 1993b; Wackers 2001; Wackers 2005.

they remain obscure. No poem called Madocke has come down to us and of the author we know nothing more than can be deduced from the text of Van den vos Reynaerde itself. For example, the poem's language shows that Willem came from East Flanders.¹⁶ He must have been well-educated and widely read, was familiar with Old French beast narratives, which provided material and inspiration, and was well-informed about legal procedures. He may have been a monk with considerable experience in worldly affairs.¹⁷

A few lines down a second author is mentioned in the prologue: 'Arnout' (6). He is said to have failed to complete or write one or more stories about Reynaert. Initially critics assumed a joint authorship and Arnout was seen as the writer who had started Van den vos Reynaerde but had not been able to complete it. Willem was supposed to have rewritten the section composed by his predecessor (approximately up to the conviction) and to have completed it by adding the section on Reynaert's reconciliation, revenge and escape.¹⁸ Later, however, a greater appreciation of the unity displayed by the composition of the poem led to the view, now generally held, that the poem was the work of a single author: Willem. The similar ways in which the Old French sources were used in the first and second sections of Van den vos Reynaerde would seem to confirm this opinion.¹⁹

This conclusion obviously requires a different explanation for the second name. Some scholars associate Arnout with the prologue of Willem's most important Old French source, Le Plaid, in which an anonymous author mentions a certain 'Perrot' who is supposed to have 'forgotten' to record the story of Reynaert's trial.²⁰ Others hold it to be an invented name, made up for the sake of creating ambiguity or as an oblique hint at the Middle Dutch, thirteenth-century Arthurian Roman van Walewein, as this romance was written by two authors (Penninc and Pieter Vostaert).²¹ It has also been suggested that Arnout is the author of a Flemish translation of the Old French beast narrative to which Le Plaid is a sequel.²²

Van den vos Reynaerde must have been written after the composition of Le Plaid, for which, as we saw earlier, a date of composition is assumed of 1179, and before 1279, the last year in which Reynardus vulpes, the Latin translation of Van den vos Reynaerde, can have been written (see p. 36). There have been several attempts at narrowing down this broad estimate with its margin of one hundred years by reading the poem to a greater or lesser degree as a roman à clef. Maurits Gysseling discerned allusions to historical events from the last years of the reign of Philip of Alsace, Count of Flanders (1168-1191), on the basis of which he dates the work before 1191. Leopold Peeters, on the other hand, wanted to assign a date of around 1260, as several passages were considered by him to refer to the struggle between two noble dynasties, the Dampierre and the Avesnes families, about the succession in Flanders and Hainault.²³

A certain consensus has formed around the latter date, although on different grounds. It appears that Willem made use of an Old French compilation, the original version of which is dated after 1205. Aspects of his versification technique have also led to a date of around or just after the middle of the thirteenth century.²⁴ In addition there are several Middle Dutch works that allude to Van den vos Reynaerde. Jacob van Maerlant, for example, announces in his Rijmbijbel (completed in 1271) in connection with the truth value of his poem: dit nes niet madox droem / noch reinard noch arturs boerden ('this is not Madoc's dream, nor a wild story about Reinard or Artur'), perhaps referring to the story about Madoc mentioned in the first line of Van den vos Reynaerde. Here, Maerlant shows his contempt for the fictitious lies in Van den vos Reynaerde and other stories, which would seem to have been written reasonably recently.²⁵

Positioning Willem in East Flanders does not automatically provide us with a clue as to the region where the poem originated. As is evident from the oeuvre of the Flemish author Maerlant, whose works were commissioned by patrons in the county of Holland, the author of Van den vos Reynaerde might have written for people in a region other than East Flanders. However, the Flemish origin of the work is confirmed by the author's use of place-names, such as 'Abstale' (802), 'Belsele' (2097), 'Elmare' (373 ff.), 'Hijfte' (2262-63), 'Hulsterloe' (2575 ff.), 'Kriekepit' (2578 ff.), 'Leye' (2640) and 'Waes' (2257). These toponyms from the Ghent area indicate that the work's primary audience must have been familiar with the geography of East Flanders (see also p. 28 and the Index of proper names).²⁶

3.1 The Prologue

In his prologue (1-40) Willem addresses ‘peasants and fools’ (13), urging them with considerable force to leave his text alone, as they will not understand it anyway (11-24). A few lines further down the poet makes clear that his work is intended for those who know how to appreciate it (34, 39): Ik wille dat dieghene horen [...] Diet verstaen met goeden sinne (‘I wish it to be heard by those ... who will understand it properly’). But how is Willem’s poem to be understood? ²⁷

A similar authorial attitude is found in Esopet. In the prologue to this late thirteenth or early fourteenth-century Middle Dutch collection of fables the author also discusses the way in which the work should be understood. The anonymous Esopet poet points out to his audience that, although his fables may not be a direct representation of the real world, they none the less contain truth:

Ic sal u hier exemple maken
 Van beesten recht of si spraken.
 Maer merket ende hoert
 Meer die redene dan die woert.
 Ontdoet elc wort, ghi vinter in Redene ende goeden sin.²⁸

(I shall provide an example for you here of animals, as if they could speak.
 But mark and listen to the meaning rather than the words. Unlock each word, you’ll find in it reason and a good meaning.)

Whereas in the fables, a fictional tale of limited size is closely connected with an explicitly formulated moral, the story in a full-blown beast epic such as Van den vos Reynaerde rises to a higher plane, while the moral meaning remains implicit. And yet Willem’s desire that the audience may verstaen met goede sinne this new work of his is not far removed from the advice that they should discover the goeden sin in Esopet, or rather, it is its result. The readers and listeners of Van den vos Reynaerde, too, should first see through the ‘lies’ of the tale (that animals can speak and behave like human beings) before finding the deeper meaning of that story.²⁹

3.2 The plot

Court day – At Whitsun King Nobel holds court. The lion sends for his subjects and everyone appears, with the exception of the fox Reynaert. Ysingrijn the wolf, the dog Cortoys and Pancer the beaver charge the absent baron before the king with rape, theft and physical abuse respectively. Reynaert's case is taken up by his nephew, Grimbeert the badger. The latter's eloquent defence is interrupted by the arrival of the cock Cantecler, followed by a bier. Cantecler accuses the fox of the multiple murders of his children; the dead body on the bier – it is his daughter Coppe – is the latest proof of Reynaert's crimes. The king decides, in particular on the grounds of this last complaint, to summon the fox. (41-496)

First summons – Bruun the bear departs as the king's messenger to Manpertuus, the fox's fortress, but fails in his task. Blinded by the desire for honey that Reynaert has promised him, he gets stuck in a half-split oak in the yard of the villager Lamfroyt. Before managing to escape, he is severely maltreated by the quickly assembled villagers. Badly injured and with nothing to show for his pains, he returns to the king's court. (497-1042)

Second summons – The king's next messenger, Tybeert the cat, is hardly more successful. Eager to have mice for his dinner, Tybeert allows himself to be led by Reynaert to a priest's barn. There he walks into a snare that had been prepared for the fox. The cat's loud cries wake the priest and his family, who give him a severe beating. He barely manages to extricate himself and flee. Blind in one eye he arrives at court. (1043-1358)

Third summons – After the second failed summons, King Nobel sends Grimbeert as his messenger. The badger persuades the accused to accompany him to the court. On the way there the fox confesses his sins to his nephew, as a result of which countless crimes come to light. He especially dwells extensively and full of malicious delight on his bad behaviour towards Ysingrijn. He recounts how the wolf, as a result of the fox's actions, got stuck in a priest's barn and later fell off a beam in the roof of a house and on each occasion was badly beaten. It is clear that Reynaert's contrition is not sincere, for when they pass the garden of a convent, the fox tries to grab a cockerel. His confessor indignantly calls him to order. (1359-1752)

Conviction and reconciliation – At court, Reynaert is tried and sentenced to death. Before being led to the gallows, the fox asks permission to make a public confession. Initially he describes how he came to live a life of sin. However, in a subtle way he works round to an (invented) story about a treasure and a conspiracy on the king's life. The wolf, bear and cat, as well as Grimbeert and Reynaert's own father are said to have made every effort to dethrone Nobel and to put Bruun on the throne. The conspiracy was foiled only because Reynaert managed to steal his father's treasure, which would have financed the rising. There is no one present at court to contradict this tale: Ysingrijn, Bruun and Tybeert are erecting the gallows somewhere else, Grimbeert has in the meantime left the court together with Reynaert's relatives, and Reynaert Sr is said to have died. In fear of his life, but especially eager to get his hands on the treasure, King Nobel believes Reynaert's words. In addition, the queen points out that Reynaert is accusing his own relatives. His story must, therefore, be true. The king promises to pardon Reynaert in exchange for the treasure. The fox describes the place where he has buried it: near the spring Kriekeputte, not far from Hulsterloe. Nobel is not entirely happy about it all, and asks the fox to come with him to dig up the treasure. Knowing that there is no such thing, Reynaert thinks up a new lie. He declares that three years earlier he was excommunicated by the pope and that it is now high time for him to travel to Rome to have the ban lifted. From there he will journey on to the Holy Land. In the course of the official reconciliation with Reynaert the king refrains from mentioning the treasure and the excommunication to his subjects, merely stating that the fox is about to go on a pilgrimage. (1753-2795)

Revenge and flight – On their return from the field where they have erected the gallows, the bear and the wolf are imprisoned. The fox has a scrip – a special bag for pilgrims – cut from the skin on Bruun's back. Ysingrijn and his wife suffer in a similar way when they are made to provide shoes made of wolf's skin for the fox's journey. In this way Reynaert revenges himself on his opponents. King Nobel orders Belin the ram, his court chaplain, to hand over the pilgrim's attributes to Reynaert during a church ceremony. Before leaving with all the accoutrements needed by a pilgrim, the fox persuades Belin and Cuwaert the hare to accompany him a little way on his pilgrimage. As soon as he arrives at his home Manpertuus, he kills Cuwaert and sends Belin, who was waiting outside, back to the court with a letter in Reynaert's bag. He advises the ram to say that he, Belin, is the author of the letter. This is what Belin does. However, when the letter proves to be nothing but Cuwaert's bloody head, Belin has unwittingly made himself responsible for the murder of the hare. Reynaert's deception is unmistakable. Nobel, humiliated, utters a terrible roar. His position has become precarious, for by his own fault he has become embroiled with his two mightiest barons. The leopard Fyrapeel manages to reconcile the king with Bruun and Ysingrijn: the bear and the wolf are allowed, in exchange for their loyalty, to pursue and kill all members and descendants of Belin's and Reynaert's families till the end of time. Peace appears to have been restored. (2796-3469)

3.3 Words and deeds

The action in Van den vos Reynaerde consists mainly of conflict situations in which characters are pitted against one another. The conflicts are caused by Reynaert. In his encounters with Cuwaert, with Canticleer and his children, with Ysingrijn in the priest's barn and on the roof beam of a house, with Cuwaert and Belin at Manpertuus, he is always the aggressor. In the confrontation with Bruun and Tybeert as the king's messengers as well as with King Nobel himself, he responds to the court community that wishes to make him toe the line. Each time the fox manages to exploit the weaknesses of his opponents and to turn the situation to his own advantage by tricking them in an ingenious way.

The tricks follow more or less the same pattern. Reynaert greets his opponent with a great deal of flattery. In passing he mentions something that arouses a strong desire: honey, mice, a treasure, being literate. The opponent gets excited and flatters the fox, even promising him something in return for the coveted object or skill. Having made the deal, Reynaert leads his future victim to the trap. The opponent enters the trap, spurred on by Reynaert, with the result that he is humiliated and maltreated. Reynaert's confrontations with the representatives of the court community in particular run along the lines of this pattern, albeit that in the final, ultimate confrontation a number of motifs return at an abstract level: the king is led only in his mind's eye to the wilderness of Kriekeputte, where the so-called treasure is said to have been buried. He also suffers only symbolically from the usual taunts and maltreatment. Nevertheless the 'letter' that Reynaert gives Belin the ram for King Nobel, and the latter's desperate roar when he sees through Reynaert's deception and faces his own disgrace, leave little to the imagination.³⁰

The author succeeds in varying the presentation of the tricks in a subtle way. At the beginning of the poem it is a character, Canticleer, who describes the way in which Reynaert misled him and killed and devoured the larger part of his feathered offspring. The people listening to Van den vos Reynaerde are as much part of the audience as the assembled animals at the king's court. Next the audience is informed at considerable length by the narrator about the two tricks that the fox plays on his victims Bruun and Tybeert, the king's messengers. In his confession Reynaert adopts the role of narrator and tells Grimbeert – and by implication the poem's readers or listeners – in great detail of two tricks played on Ysingrijn.

When, after his conviction, the fox addresses the court, the information known by the audience of Van den vos Reynaerde no longer corresponds to what Reynaert's animal audience knows: the former now see through the fox much more clearly than the latter group does. Now two tricks are revealed simultaneously – although at different levels. Reynaert tells the animals at the king's court of the trick by which he managed to end the conspiracy: the theft of the treasure. However, in the meantime the readers or listeners of Van den vos Reynaerde realize, as a result of the narrator's intervention, 30 The tricks used by the fox to manipulate appearance and reality during a confrontation with the opponent in the Roman de Renart have been discussed by Jauss 1959, p. 212. This idea was applied to Van den vos Reynaerde by Arendt who analyses the structure and action of the tricks (Arendt 1965, pp. 149–207). For some modification of Arendt's analysis, see Bouwman 1991, pp. 402–405.

that in fact a very different trick is in the process of being developed here, one which will enable Reynaert to mislead the king and save his own skin. That trick, too, is centred on the treasure.³¹

A characteristic aspect of the tricks in Van den vos Reynaerde is their extremely verbal nature. The fox paints with pretty words (scone tale, according to the narrator in line 1075) a picture of a world as his opponents would have it, but which deviates drastically from the events that are about to take place. Even when Reynaert mocks his victims, he exploits the gap between rhetoric and reality.³² We see this for example in the following cases. Bruun has managed to pull himself free of the half-split oak and has escaped the villagers by jumping into the river. A fair way downstream he drifts to the river bank, where Reynaert sees him lying on the sand, badly hurt. The fox mocks Bruun by pretending that he does not recognize him and mistakes him for a priest, cynically taking the bear's bloody head and paws for the skull cap and gloves of an abbot or prior (941-51). Also, when Tybeert is caught by the throat in the snare, which is threatening to throttle him, he screams loudly. On that occasion Reynaert compliments the cat on the melodious way he is 'singing at the dinner table' (1218-19).

This process of renewed interpretation and narration is central to the structure of Van den vos Reynaerde (see p. 22-23). Earlier events in the story are described again by a particular character, most often by the fox, but also by other animals. Its function is always the same: the character in question presents a biased version of events that have been related earlier, as it were rewrites history along the lines of his own desires and interests, and thus characterizes himself. We see this, for example, when Reynaert chases a cockerel near a convent, but is stopped by Grimbeert. The narrator next tells us that the fox, continuing on his way, keeps looking back, licking his chops. This sinful action, about which he is quite rightly rebuked by Grimbeert, is turned by Reynaert into a pious action: he reproaches his confessor for disturbing his prayers for the salvation of the souls of all his feathered victims from the nunnery's garden (1726-44).

After Reynaert has left Nobel's court as a pilgrim, he takes Cuwaert and Belin along to Manpertuus. While the ram waits outside, the fox takes Cuwaert into his den. Once there he grabs the hare by the throat – who in mortal fear calls for Belin – and kills him. When Belin, full of suspicion, asks Reynaert why Cuwaert called out to him, the fox reinterprets the actual events here, too (3222-47). The audience, aware of what really happened, sees through the deception in these words. Similarly, from the very beginning Grimbeert presents Reynaert's theft of a sausage and his (first) attempt on Cuwaert's life as the confiscation of stolen goods and the chastisement of a stupid pupil by his master (99-169, 247-62). Grimbeert's evocation of the fox as a pious hermit who is doing penance for his sins is unmasked as a lie in retrospect when Canticleer's story shows that Reynaert, disguised as a hermit, has misled the cock and in this way has succeeded in devouring many of his children (263-81, 315-420). The characters thus try to manipulate the fictional reality of the poem by means of their verbal skills.³³

31 For a discussion of the different forms in which the tricks are presented, see Bouwman 1993a, p. 38.

32 According to Mann 1987, pp. 58-77 speculating on the discrepancy between words and deeds is already a prominent theme in Ysengrimus. Cf. also Wackers 1994.

The poem's audience is given the opportunity to gauge the gap between appearance and reality. It is regularly given more information than the characters receive by means of the narrator's commentary on events in the story and the fox's 'asides'. This enables them to see Reynaert's words in perspective. The procedure is presented emphatically in the episode of the First Summons, where readers and listeners are confronted for the first time with one of the fox's tricks, and for that reason are not yet used to Reynaert's intentions and way with words (542-46, 623-26, 634-43, 903-8). It also happens in other episodes, for example when Reynaert has been convicted and resorts to a complex trick (2034-49, 2164-78, 2227-38).

In other words, the author plays a sophisticated game with his audience. Sometimes he involves them in the story, at other times he sets them thinking about what has happened. In this way he alternately creates involvement and distance. On the one hand Reynaert impresses not only King Nobel's court, but also the readers or listeners of the beast epic with his ingenious fabrications; on the other hand the narrator encourages the audience by means of his asides to see through the 'lies' of the story, so that they 'will understand it properly' (verstaen met goeden sinne; 39).³⁴

Willem's poem does not contain any reports of historical events; there is only the made-up story. The audience knows from the outset that the happenings in this beast epic have never taken place, indeed, that they never could take place (as is the case, of course, in many fictional accounts). That is why every 'attempt' by the narrator to forge a link with (historical) reality has an ironic effect (see, for example, 293-301, 3016-21). This also happens when the animals in direct speech set the scene for their fictional actions in contemporary Flanders. For example, when a cock claims to have been shown a pilgrim's scrip and mantle by Reynaert that have come from the priory at Elmare (367-374), the tale's implied audience from East Flanders will think of the nearby priory of that name, but it will also realize that no pilgrim's attributes are handed over to foxes there.

Perhaps the anthropomorphism in Van den vos Reynaerde, i.e. making animals act and speak like human beings and using objects intended for use by humans, should be explained in a similar way. The clash of animal and human components is likely to elicit at least a smile – about a fox wearing four(!) shoes, for example (2852-2934) – but with the laugh comes the realization of the impossibility of the representation. This realization may even be a condition for the comic effect.

At moments of verbal high tension the author and his Reynaert character seem to coincide in their roles of 'narrator/tempter'. Both create a contrast between reality and appearance, create 'fiction', both 'lie' in their attempts to convince their audiences. Willem is certainly not unsympathetic in his description of Reynaert's tricks. Nevertheless an appreciation of the esthetic perfection of Reynaert's verbal skills does not necessarily imply a positive evaluation of his actions. This is evident from the negative epithet fel (wicked, vicious) that is frequently used by both the narrator and other characters when referring to the fox: Reynaert, den fellen (60), dat felle dier (88), die felle ghebuere (344), die felle (614) etc. Moreover, the author seems to be just as critical of the fox's behaviour as he is of that of the fox's opponents (see p. 24-27).

3.4 Literary space

Willem regularly makes his characters, and Reynaert in particular, refer to real places. Thus the narrative space in his poem acquires a sense of actuality for his audience, while at the same time the author creates an ironic effect, as was suggested earlier. In his fabrications, the fox uses a multitude of well-known place names to enhance the truth of his tale.³⁵ The Flemish names evoke a sense of proximity, whereas place-names like Aachen and Paris (2630-31) broaden the perspective to 'far away'. This is not to say, however, that the story is set in a realistic, historic landscape. It is a tell-tale sign that the narrator himself refrains from any kind of realistic topography. He never, or almost never, provides exact locations for the places that are really important – particularly King Nobel's court and Manpertuus, Reynaert's den (a literary place-name!). There is little point, therefore, in tracing Bruun's journey on a map of thirteenth-century Flanders, for example, as has at times been tried in traditional place-name research (which considered the stream that Bruun jumps into in order to escape from the villagers to be the river Scheldt). Rather than real geography, we are dealing in Van den vos Reynaerde with a literary space.³⁶

The author consistently situates the conflicts between the court animals and Reynaert in two distinctive landscapes: the well-ordered world of the court as opposed to the trackless wilderness. Nobel's landscape is a protected area, a fenced-in park filled with the softness of spring and a blissful peace (41-43, 322-39), a space characterised by straight roads (1314-17, 1702-3, 1747-50). The landscape in which Reynaert lives is complex and threatening for the court animals: mountainous, with dark woods and desolate, wild regions; there are no paved roads, at best crooked paths (502-12, 632-33, 881-87, 891). In a number of respects the moral lapses of the court animals in their conflict with the fox are represented spatially, as crossing the line from the well-organised world of the court and/or entering the wilderness. To mention a few examples: Canticleer ventures with his children bueten mure, outside the walls (393), Bruun reaches the half-split oak with honey along a crooked path (632-33), Tybeert only regains the rechte strate, the straight road leading back to the court, after his beating at the village priest's house (1314-17), King Nobel is sent by the fox to the terrifying Kriekeputte wilderness to get hold of the treasure (2572-2697). When Reynaert plans to pounce on one of the convent's cocks, he is also said to be buter rechter vaert, 'beside the straight road' (1694) – only a short time after he had promised his confessor Grimbeert to better his life 'and to point the right way / to all those he would see stray' (1682-83).

35 For a survey of the traditional research into the place-names, see Teirlinck 1910-1912; Van Daele 1994, pp. 7-175.

36 For literary approaches to the question of space, see Arendt 1965, pp. 73-148; Van Daele 1994, pp. 217-542; for modifications, see Bouwman 1991, pp. 392-396; Bouwman 1996.

The conclusion of the confrontations often takes place in an in-between area where human beings live: the village (and, to a lesser degree, the convent). The inhabitants of the village are presented as rough, coarse and ugly, and as a group behave with hostility towards the court animals. It is to this uncourtly place that Reynaert leads his victims, where they are beaten up and reduced to whining animals, stripped of all courtly ideals and without the power of speech (644-849, 1163-1317, 1508-1604, 1610-45). For Reynaert the village is part of his hunting ground; for the court animals it belongs to the wilderness.

The 'park and wilderness' landscape described in Van den vos Reynaerde is, therefore, to a certain extent a psychological landscape. The appreciation of the scenery is determined from a court perspective: the parks have a positive meaning, the wildernesses a negative one. However, for Reynaert it is exactly the other way round: when, at the end of the story, he departs for good with his family, he extols the virtues of a new wilderness where they will be able to hunt to their heart's content (3153-65, 3317-29).

3.5 Justice and its perversion

The action in Van den vos Reynaerde develops within a legal framework: against the fox, continuously in conflict with the other animals, criminal proceedings are initiated at the court of King Nobel.³⁷ The story begins with the assembly of the court at Whitsun, presided over by the king. The fox's victims or – in the case of Cuwaert and Coppe

– their relatives bring charges against the fox. The accused is not present and is defended by a relative, but to no avail. Reynaert is summoned. Not until after the third summons does the fox appear at court. He is tried and sentenced to death by the barons. However, he manages to persuade the king to pardon him and thus escapes execution. Even so, he is incorrigible and revenges himself on his enemies. One might expect that in a plot of this kind the trial would be central. Nothing could be further from the truth, however: the whole trial is described, one might even say dismissed, in less than twenty lines (1868-84). The story is only half-way through when the legal proceedings against the fox are concluded! We can hardly, therefore, consider the extensive fabricated story spun by Reynaert at the king's court as an oratio judicialis, a legal speech in the strict sense of the word.³⁸ After all, Reynaert's speech does not start until after the verdict has been read and the executioners are on their way to prepare the gallows. It may be concluded that, despite the legal narrative framework, the poet of Van den vos Reynaerde finds other aspects of his text more important.³⁹

Of greater significance than Reynaert's legal trial is the moral 'trial' with which Willem presents his audience. In that trial it is not just Reynaert who is indicted, but also, or rather in particular, his opponents. In much the same way as the king urged his barons to judge Reynaert (1879-84), the poet wishes to induce the audience to judge his characters, placed as they are on opposite sides of a conflict. The weightiest conflict in Van den vos Reynaerde, between the fox and the king, causes new, feudal conflicts. They undermine the relationship between Nobel and his vassals, and thus the court community itself.

It is striking in this context that initially the king asks his barons' advice before taking any legal step and also acts upon their counsel (466-81, 1000-16, 1328-31). Even when Reynaert appears at court, feudal harmony still reigns there. After a proper trial the fox is sentenced to death by the highest barons, who have been urged to do so by the king (1868-84). However, when the fox appears to be the owner of a huge treasure, Nobel's interests no longer coincide with those of his barons. That at once marks the end of any proper legal procedures. The king leads Reynaert out of the circle of courtiers for private discussion (2491-95). He is reconciled with Reynaert without asking his barons' advice and without telling them that he stands to gain a treasure. For the first time in the story the court has become internally divided in a conflict with the fox. Fissures appear in the fabric of the feudal order.

When Reynaert appears at court, he presents himself as the king's loyal servant and – without mentioning any names – accuses a number of courtiers of being false (1786-

38 On the notion that Reynaert's pack of lies is not an oratio judicialis, see Bouwman 1991, pp. 278-281.

39 The point of view that the legal aspects have a literary as well as a historical context was suggested by Heeroma 1971 and Bouwman 1991, pp. 360-367 and 397-402. This section is based on that discussion.

92). At first the fox's accusations seem little more than empty slander and are dismissed resolutely by Nobel as such (1796-1801). However, the invented conflict between the king and his barons becomes reality when, eager to believe the existence of a treasure and a conspiracy, the king withdraws his protection from the alleged conspirators Bruun and Ysingrijn and, without a trial, has them taken prisoner and maltreated. This is a felony and a very serious breach of the king's obligations as liege lord. The king now enters into a feud with his most important vassals. In the end Nobel manages to resolve this internal conflict only by committing more injustices.

As part of the reconciliation it is determined that Bruun and Ysingrijn and their relatives will be allowed to hunt and kill Belin, Reynaert and the clans to which they belong for all eternity. In issuing this decree the king once again – and this time irrevocably – breaks his obligations towards his vassals. Nobel now keeps the peace by excluding Belin and Reynaert and their relations from the peace; he denies these vassals their right to protection and delivers them to the mercies of wolves and bears, 'from now until Doomsday' (3443). The feudal order, for the safeguarding of which Reynaert was tried and convicted, has now been suspended. In actual fact the court ceases to exist as an orderly society, a community where predator and prey might live together in peace.

It is no accident that an eschatological dimension opens up here. In the encounter with Reynaert, the satanic tempter, each opponent separately falls from grace and eventually the court community as a whole is degraded from paradise to wilderness. Reynaert has experienced that process too, or so he says, after his conviction in a public confession (2070-78). The fox describes his mild behaviour towards the lambs as the blissful state of paradise, and his killing of a lamb as the beginning of his 'fall'. Willem alludes here to the well-known verses in the Bible where the prophet Isaiah describes the future messianic peace (in fact in terms of the lost paradise from Genesis):

Habitat lupus cum agno et pardus cum hedo accubabit vitulus et leo et ovis simul morabuntur et puer parvulus minabit eos; vitulus et ursus pascentur simul requiescent catuli eorum et leo quasi bos comedet paleas.⁴⁰

The wolf shall dwell with the lamb: and the leopard shall lie down with the kid: the calf and the lion, and the sheep shall abide together, and a little child shall lead them. The calf and the bear shall feed: their young ones shall rest together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

The final passage of Van den vos Reynaerde – where the leopard tries to reconcile the lion with the wolf and the bear by delivering to them the ram and his descendants – is, in this view, a cynical reversal of the biblical vision of peace. By doubling the 'paradise lost' motif, the author indicates that the court community now follows in Reynaert's footsteps. This insight is confirmed in yet other ways.

Fyrapeel explains to the king why Belin the ram has forfeited his life: 'he has admitted himself that he betrayed Cuwaert' (3418-19). These words cannot but remind one of Reynaert's words to Hermeline: 'The king acknowledged that Cuwaert was the first to accuse us falsely before him' (3108-10). Belin, like Cuwaert, is made a peace offering, a means of compensation in a reconciliation between third parties. Here, as was the case when Reynaert reported the king's decision to Hermeline, the audience may distinguish truth and untruth in what Fyrapeel says. It knows that Cuwaert did not treat Reynaert treacherously; it also knows that Belin was not the cause of Cuwaert's demise. But in the same way that Reynaert puts a very wide interpretation on the king's command to honour him (2780-83), the leopard understands Belin's confession that he has written the letter in a purely metaphorical way. This cross-current strengthens the audience's realization that in the end the actions of the court community are not hugely different from Reynaert's actions.

The wilderness encroaches on the court where predator and prey used to live harmoniously. Looking back from the end of Van den vos Reynaerde, we see that the theme of the lost paradise is also mirrored in the fable of which Reynaert reminds his listeners to illustrate how undesirable the usurpation of Nobel's throne by Bruun would have been (2299-2325). In this fable the frogs exchange their freedom entirely through their own fault for the tyranny of King Stork, 'who killed and devoured them wherever he found them, both in the water and in the field' (2311-13). In Reynaert's view, Bruun is like this devouring stork. Willem's audience knows that Reynaert is lying about the bear's role. But that same audience also knows after the bitter denouement of the story that Nobel, Bruun and Ysingrijn themselves are applicants for the role of King Stork when the sovereign has granted the wolf and the bear the right to persecute some of his subjects: 'In the field or in the woods, they will all be at your disposal and you may kill them as much as you like' (3444-46).

Van den vos Reynaerde is a story of animals that are wicked and stupid, and of one animal that is wicked and devious. Its readers and listeners must surely have admired the ingenuity of Reynaert's tricks. However, it is unlikely that their admiration prevented them from arriving at a moral judgement of the fox's behaviour. After all, the story is about animals and it is always someone else who is deceived. The story contains no character with whom the audience can effortlessly identify. In this respect Van den vos Reynaerde resembles the fable to which it indirectly owes its existence: its audience and readers are made to see in a mirror how to avoid 'bestly' behaviour themselves.

4. The audience

Earlier we saw that Van den vos Reynaerde was probably written in the third quarter of the thirteenth century, for an audience and/or readership likely to have enjoyed the fact that the action is situated by the characters themselves in the Flemish landscape. For example, the convent where Reynaert is said to have acquired his pilgrim's attributes and where Ysingrijn is said to have rung the bells is called Elmare (373, 1483, 1493), which was the name of a priory of Saint Peter's Abbey near Ghent. Also, the wolf and the fox are said to have sworn an oath of allegiance under a tree near Belsele (2097), and Reynaert claims that the conspirators gathered between Hijfte and Ghent (2263). There can be no doubt, therefore, that the implied audience of Van den vos Reynaerde is East Flemish. However, the poem contains no information – not even in the prologue – that allows a more precise identification of the person(s) for whom it was intended. Scholars of necessity have to make the best of indirect and often ambiguous data.

According to an old hypothesis Van den vos Reynaerde was written for a bourgeois audience. Its didactic tenor was thought to suit the mentality and cultural emancipation of the patricians in Flemish towns like Ghent and Bruges, which had enjoyed a marked economic boom in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries and had also gained in political influence. In addition, it has been observed that this urban elite seems to be the only social group that is not satirized in Willem's poem, whereas the aristocracy, clergy and country people are severely criticized and mocked. From this point of view Reynaert can be seen as a freedom-loving individualist whose quick-wittedness brings about the fall of the antiquated feudal system. King Nobel is considered as more or less mirroring the count of Flanders.⁴¹

However, other critics have argued that within the narrative reality of the text Reynaert should be regarded as belonging to the high aristocracy (like Bruun and Ysingrijn, for example) and is a criminal rather than a trickster by medieval standards. In their view Van den vos Reynaerde was written for a court audience, as has also been argued for the Old French Roman de Renart. In that case the story was not inspired by bourgeois resentment, but either by aristocratic self-mockery, or by a real concern for the decline of feudal society. The conflict of King Nobel with his vassal Reynaert might then mirror the tensions present among the Flemish aristocracy in the thirteenth century. The lower aristocracy had lost a sizeable part of its freedom and power in its dealings with the count. The count, moreover, was not only liege lord, he was also a vassal of the king of France. The two Flemish countesses, Johanna and her sister Margareta had to deal with liege lords (Philip Augustus, Louis VIII and IX) who aimed to limit the independence of their mighty vassal as much as lay within their power, making clever use of the conflicts between the count and the aristocracy and the urban patricians. There is some evidence that the aristocratic Dampierre family was familiar with Van den vos Reynaerde.⁴²

Various compromises have been proposed. It is not impossible, for example, that, as is suggested in lines 26-31 of the prologue, Van den vos Reynaerde had an aristocratic patron, but was listened to by a bourgeois audience. It should also be taken into account that the urban elite of the thirteenth century consisted of several layers, as the aristocracy by birth had mixed to a considerable degree with the more socially successful members of the bourgeoisie. The possibility that vernacular literature was aimed at different social communities as its intended audience has also been suggested. In that case the text will have appealed to both the bourgeois elite in the towns and the court aristocracy.⁴³

It is tempting to scan the text for details which might be made to fit the reality of the time and in particular the political situation in Flanders. In an extreme form we see this in attempts to read Van den vos Reynaerde as a roman à clef (see p. 16). Another approach is to detect connections with contemporary literature – which, of course, may also have implications for determining the primary audience of the beast narrative. In this context it is striking that Van den vos Reynaerde pays far more detailed attention to the conflict between Reynaert and his liege lord Nobel than does the Old French Le Plaid. It is possible that the author plays here with a topical theme from contemporary chivalric romance.

In Old French and Middle Dutch Charlemagne epics dating from the period 1170-1260, the antagonism between king and vassal is a major theme. The feudal order is maintained by powerful and loyal vassals like Guillaume d'Orange. However, in a number of texts internal tensions threaten the court community, because the king treats one of his loyal vassals unjustly. In a number of so-called 'traitor epics' the king is bribed or driven to do so by a malicious traitor who falsely accuses the loyal vassal of having devised a plot to murder the king, which he only just managed to foil, or so the traitor pretends. In the 'epics of revolt' (works like the Old French Renaut de Montauban and the Middle Dutch adaptation of this text, Renout van Montalbaen) the king through his own malice causes the loyal vassals to rebel and to go into forced exile. Only at the end of the tale are king and vassal reconciled and traitors vanquished. Then, too, the feudal order is restored with God's help. Possibly well-known patterns from Charlemagne epics are reversed in Van den vos Reynaerde. The fox may then be seen as a (triumphant!) traitor who manages to persuade King Nobel to take his two loyal vassals, Bruun the bear and Ysingrijn the wolf, prisoner and to maltreat them by telling a brilliantly fabricated story of a conspiracy and of an equally imaginary treasure. Alternatively, Reynaert can be seen as a rebel vassal who is not reconciled with the king, but deliberately and successfully leaves the court community, preferring voluntary exile.

42 A court audience was argued by Van Oostrom 1983. On the Dampierre milieu, see Bouwman 1991, pp. 65-66 (n. 34), 425-426 (n.194-195), and cf. Van Daele 1998, p. 139.

43 See Pleij 1983 and Van Hoecke 1987, who regard the rise of a Flemish literature as an endeavour by the counts to increase their prestige with the French king, their liege lord. On the multifunctionality of Middle Dutch texts, see Prevenier 1994; Besamusca 1998 studies the Moriaen, a Middle Dutch Arthurian romance, from this point of view. Cf. also Wackers 2000a and Van Oostrom 2006, pp. 227-72.

The implied audience of Van den vos Reynaerde must also have been familiar with a range of animal stories. In the prologue the author regrets that die avonture van Reynaerde (4) had not yet been made in Dutch. It is only after several tens of lines that the tale appears to be about a fox, when it is said that all animals come to King Nobel's court day, 'except for Reynaert the fox alone' (50). Between the appearance of Nobel die coninc (44) and the first reference to his status as a lion, there are more than 1800 lines: Voert sprac Reynaert: 'Coninc lyoen' (1833) ('Reynaert continued: "King Lion"'). When Ysingrijn is introduced, it is again not stated what kind of animal he is. The audience is informed of this only much later, when Reynaert confesses to his nephew Grimbeert his crimes against Ysingrijn among much else. On that occasion he mentions that it was his doing that the villagers noticed 'that there was caught in the priest's larder a wolf' (1574-75). The author clearly did not think it necessary to mention the kind of animal concerned when he introduced these characters; he assumed that the audience would already be familiar with them from other stories. Where one passage from the fox's confession is concerned, such foreknowledge can be demonstrated.⁴⁴

In Bruges, around 1275, the Reynardus vulpes was written, a translation of Van den vos Reynaerde in Latin verse (see above). The author of this work, Balduinus Iuvenis, is a representative of the earliest audience ever to hear or read Willem's poem. In the course of his perusal of the Flemish beast narrative Balduinus came across a passage in the episode of the fox's confession in which Reynaert declares that he has deceived the wolf on many occasions:

'Sint dedic hem meerren scamp up thijs, daer icken leerde visschen, daer hi niene conste ontwisschen.
Hi ontfincker meneghen slach' (1504-7).

(Later I caused him more disgrace on the ice, when I taught him to fish in a place where he could not escape. There he received a severe hiding.)

44 Our discussion of intertextuality is based primarily on Bouwman 1998, which also contains a concise survey of story elements in Van den vos Reynaerde with parallels in other beast narratives.

The fox refers here to a story about a fishing expedition on the ice, which existed independently from Van den vos Reynaerde. The oldest versions are found in the Latin Ysengrimus (ca. 1150) and in branch III (Les Poissons, ca. 1178) of the Roman de Renart. In his Reynardus vulpes Balduinus extended the passage from his exemplar from four to sixteen Latin lines (663-78). However, the details of the interpolation were not of his own devising; too many narrative elements which are lacking in Van den vos Reynaerde are found in the version of the story from the Ysengrimus and branch III to make that likely. As Balduinus could not possibly know from the four Middle Dutch lines what Ysingrijn was fishing with, and why he could not escape (the wolf had followed the fox's advice one night and had hung his tail in a hole in the ice which froze over during the night), he must have been familiar with another story about the wintry fishing expedition, from which he could derive material for his interpolation.⁴⁵

Like Balduinus, the implied audience of Van den vos Reynaerde (assuming it was familiar with contemporary literature) also knew a version of 'the fishing expedition on the ice' as well as other beast narratives to which the text alludes. Willem's poem refers in passing to various episodes which are lacking from its Old French source Le Plaid. These episodes must have been known in the thirteenth century as independent narratives. Some of these literary cross-currents may well have enhanced the appreciation of some characters' manipulative speeches by those among the audience who were acquainted with these narratives.

Grimbeert vigorously defends his absent uncle against the charges that have been brought against him. He blackens the reputation of Ysingrijn, Reynaert's chief opponent, by dwelling on the cases when the wolf treated the fox badly. On one of those occasions the wolf is said to have taken advantage shamelessly of Reynaert's courage. After the fox had thrown fish down from a cart to Ysingrijn, who was following at a safe distance, all Reynaert was offered as his share of the plunder by the greedy wolf were the bones of one single fish (206-16). This story of the fox and the cart loaded with fish is found outside Willem's beast narrative in two branches of the Roman de Renart, dating from ca. 1178. The oldest version features as part of branch III. Renart shams dead when he sees a fish cart approaching. The merchants throw him on to the cart, with the intention of skinning the dead body at a later stage and selling the pelt. While the cart rattles along, Renart gorges himself on fish. Eventually the fox jumps down off the cart, with garlands of eels around his body, and taunts the merchants. A later version of his story is found in branch XIV (La Queue – Primaut), in which Renart tells the tale of his success in the fish cart to the wolf Primaut, one of Ysengrin's brothers. Primaut then also lies down in the middle of the road shamming dead when a fish cart approaches, but this time the merchants are on their guard and give the wolf a merciless beating.

Grimbeert's story does not agree with the two Old French versions. One might assume that a story is referred to here which has been lost. However, another explanation is also worth considering. This particular fish cart version is Willem's own invention, and a variation on well-known versions not unlike the story of the stolen ham which Grimbeert is going to produce next as an example of a deception practised by Ysingrijn (217-29). In the same way as the fox goes to great lengths to procure the ham for Ysingrijn and is rewarded on that occasion with the string that it hung from, Reynaert throws fish down from the cart to the wolf, who leaves just one single fish' bones (214). The Middle Dutch author has Grimbeert twist the well-known versions of 'the fox and the fish cart' so that his uncle will be acquitted. That is the function of the link. Those among the audience who know the French versions will see through the procedure, and will reach the conclusion that Grimbeert is lying.

Based on its prior knowledge of beast narratives the story's public will have been able to estimate the extent to which characters in Van den vos Reynaerde re-interpret and twist older stories. That is an essential aspect of the retelling of events from branch II-Va by Ysingrijn, Grimbeert and Reynaert respectively. This oldest branch of the Roman de Renart, which was probably written around 1175, relates the beginning of the conflict between the fox and wolf. After a number of adventures that did not go well for the fox, Renart accidentally enters the den of the she-wolf Hersent, who has recently given birth to a number of cubs. Renart's claim that her husband Ysengrin has been telling everyone that the fox is in love with her makes Hersent so angry that she turns the allegation into action and commits adultery. Ysengrin hears what has happened from the cubs, who have been befouled by the fox and called sons of a whore. The wolf is furious with his wife, who realizes that Renart has deceived her. When they hunt the fox, Hersent runs ahead in her eagerness, gets stuck in one of the entrances to the fox's den, and is subsequently raped by Renart, an action witnessed from a distance by her husband who arrives a little later. Ysengrin charges the fox at King Noble's court with rape, keeping quiet in the meantime about the earlier adultery. However, the fox is not sentenced, but it is decided that Renart is to swear his innocence on the bones of a saint. Ysengrin decides to take the law into his own hands, and devises an ambush. On the appointed day Renart is to swear on the teeth of the mastiff Roonel, who is told to feign death. Then, as soon as he has gripped the fox with his jaws, a pack of dogs will pounce on the fox. However, the fox notices the deception and manages to escape just in time.

If the audience of Van den vos Reynaerde is familiar with the events in these branches, it will understand why the wolf, in making his complaint, not only remains silent about the adultery between the she-wolf and the fox, but deliberately mentions the rape of Hersint and the maltreatment of the cubs in one breath, suggesting in so doing that the two crimes took place in the wolf's lair (thus obviating the need to explain that Hersint was raped in the fox's den, which, from a legal point of view, would be suspicious). The listener sees through Ysingrijn's pretence at astonishment when he states that Reynaert was to swear his innocence with an oath and continues: 'as the relics were brought, he changed his mind, and escaped us in his stronghold' (83-85). After all, it was not Reynaert's wily character, but the ambush with Roonel and the other mastiffs that made the fox decide to run for it. The audience, armed as it is with its knowledge of other stories, also understands that Grimbeert ignores the rape and stresses the adultery, which he re-interprets as proof of a courtly love affair of more than seven years standing between Reynaert and Haersint (234-46). Reynaert, too, alludes in his confession and at court to the adulterous relationship (1648-69, 1970-92), which makes sense only if it is assumed that the audience already knew the popular story about it.

How do these literary cross-currents affect our ideas about the primary audience of Van den vos Reynaerde? As the beast narratives that Willem takes to be common knowledge are not extant in Middle Dutch, but only in Old French, a bilingual audience must be assumed in Flanders. The fact that it knows that Nobel die coninc is a lion, shows familiarity with the Old French literary tradition in which King Lion is called Noble for the first time (see branche II-Va). The fact that in Willem's poem the small dog Cortoys 'complained to the king in French' (100), a complaint that is clearly understood perfectly by the courtiers, as Tybeert's and Grimbeert's reactions show, is also indicative of familiarity with bilingualism among the primary listeners of Van den vos Reynaerde. This also furthers our understanding of the reason why Willem did not limit himself to making a translation when he turned Le Plaid into Dutch (see also the prologue, line 4 ff.), but instead wrote a reworked narrative with a brilliant ending in literary competition with his French colleagues. After the fox's conviction the Old French author concludes his story using about two hundred lines. However, from this point onwards Willem adds another 1500 lines or so, almost doubling the poem in size, focusing on Reynaert's escape from his sentence by means of an elaborate and ingenious collection of lies. A bilingual audience will no doubt have enjoyed the competitive spirit (see p. 13). This seems an additional argument to regard the patricians of Ghent as the implied audience, as the Flemish-speaking urban elite learned French in childhood to facilitate contacts in adult life with commercial partners and the high aristocracy.

5. Transmission and reception

Van den vos Reynaerde is extant more or less complete in two Middle Dutch manuscripts containing several texts. The codices are known among scholars by the names of the places where they used to be kept: the Comburg manuscript and the Dyck manuscript. In addition fragments of three other manuscripts have been found. When after several centuries the codices had lost their original function, bookbinders used strips or leaves from these volumes in the bindings of printed books, from which they were retrieved in later centuries. Reynaert scholars refer to these fragments as the Darmstadt, Rotterdam and Brussels fragments, according to the cities where they are kept. The five sources are frequently referred to simply by the letters A, F, E, G and J.

The first manuscript (A) was discovered at the end of the eighteenth century in the library of the Ritterstift Comburg near Schwäbisch Hall in Baden-Württemberg (now Stuttgart, Württembergische Landesbibliothek, Cod. poet. et phil. 2° 22). It is a composite manuscript, assembled around 1540, that consists of six parts, all of which were produced in East Flanders (probably in Ghent) within a span of forty years (ca. 1380-1420) by ten different scribes. The volume numbers 346 parchment folios (267x195 mm) and contains some fifty different texts, among them Die Rose by a certain Heinric, poems by Jacob van Maerlant, Van Sente Brandane, sections from Jan van Boendale's Der leken spieghel, and the Rijmkroniek van Vlaanderen. The beast epic Van den vos Reynaerde, in total 3469 lines – on folios 192v^a – 213r^b – is part of the fourth manuscript, numbering 56 folios (179-234). It was copied at the beginning of the fifteenth century by scribe E with two columns of 42 lines per page in a Textualis, the usual formal bookscript.⁴⁶ The present edition is based on the text in this manuscript.⁴⁷

The second complete manuscript (F) was not discovered until a century later, in 1907, again in a German aristocratic library, this time of Schloss Dyck near Neuss in Rheinland-Westfalen. The manuscript numbers 124 parchment folios (294/6x211 mm), written in two columns of 40 lines per page in a Textualis. It was probably produced in the period 1330-1360 in Nedersticht or the eastern part of the county of Holland. Van den vos Reynaerde numbers 3393 lines, covering folios 102r^b-123r^b, following Jacob van Maerlant's encyclopedia Der naturen bloeme. Since 1991 it has been kept in the Universitätsbibliothek Münster under shelfmark Ms. N.R. 381.⁴⁸

The fragment of the third manuscript (E) – known since 1889 and now kept in Darmstadt, Hessische Landes- und Hochschulbibliothek under shelfmark Hs. 3321 – consists of a cropped and damaged parchment bifolium (now 216x148 mm), written with two columns of 36 lines per page in a Textualis. The manuscript from which the fragment originates must have been written in what is now the Dutch province of Limburg in the last quarter of the thirteenth century. The text comprises 287 lines, corresponding to lines 2588-2722, 3017-3158 in this edition.⁴⁹

The fragments of the fourth manuscript (G) were presented in 1933 by Erik von Scherling, an antiquarian bookdealer in Leiden, to the codicologist Willem de Vreese, who acquired them for the Gemeentebibliotheek (Public Library) in Rotterdam, where they are kept under shelfmark 96 B 5 (olim 14 G 8). It consists of two and three strips of parchment, cut from two bifolia, filled with a single column of ca. 24 lines per page in a Textualis in an unusual lay-out: the last letter of each pair of rhyming words has been written only once (in the right margin at some distance from the rest of the text, at the level of the first rhyme word) and has been connected with the two rhyme words by wavy lines. This fourth manuscript was probably produced in the period 1260-1280, in the area around Geldern-Kleef, now in Germany. This makes it the oldest known source of Van den vos Reynaerde. The text numbers 63 partly damaged lines, which correspond to lines 2186-94, 2209-17, 2556-64, 2579-87, 3123-29, 3147-52, 3274-80, 3299-3305 in this edition.⁵⁰

In 1971 fragments of a fifth Reynaert manuscript (J) were discovered in Brussels. Glued together with other fragments, they were used in the upper and lower covers of the binding of a printed book from the first half of the sixteenth century (now Brussels, Koninklijke Bibliotheek, ms. IV 774). It concerns six cropped paper folios (now 170x110 mm), written in a single column of 30/33 lines per page in a Cursiva, the cursive gothic bookscript. The manuscript to which the leaves originally belonged was produced in the first quarter of the fifteenth century in East Flanders. The text comprises 369 lines, roughly corresponding to lines 577-641, 830-91, 956-1023, 1465-1523, 1706-66, 2079-2142 in this edition.⁵¹

Van den vos Reynaerde must have been a popular text in the medieval Low Countries. This is indicated by the fact that it survives in five manuscripts, a relatively large number for a narrative work – at least by Dutch standards – from a number of different regions (Flanders, the county of Holland, Limburg, Geldern/Kleef), but also that a fellow author was twice inspired by Willem's work.⁵²

It was probably in Bruges that an author who called himself Balduinus Iuvenis wrote a Latin adaptation. He dedicated his Reynardus vulpes to Jan van Vlaanderen (1250–1291), son of the Flemish count Gwijde van Dampierre and prior of the chapter of Sint-Donaas in Bruges. Balduinus begins as follows: Fabula Reynardi, sicut reor agnita multis teutonice scripta, metrificata sonet ('may the history of Reynaert, known as I think to many in Dutch, now sound in Latin verse'). The poem was written between 1272–1279, but has been preserved only in a rather corrupt printed edition, produced in the workshop of Ketelaer and De Leempt in 1473 or 1474 in Utrecht, which is extant in two copies: Deventer, Stads- or Atheneumbibliotheek, Inc. VIII C 8 (4) and Mainz, Priesterseminar, Ms. 165 (8). Balduinus integrally adopted the narrative structure of Van den vos Reynaerde and often stayed close to the Flemish text with his choice of words. However, he definitely also added emphases that are entirely his own, mainly by means of abbreviations and moralisations, and placed himself in the Latin literary tradition. The Reynardus vulpes was – and still is – used mainly by literary historians as an early source (L) of Van den vos Reynaerde.⁵³

Reynaerts historie, a poem of some 7800 lines, was written at least a century and a half later. In its first part the unknown Flemish poet follows Van den vos Reynaerde fairly accurately. However, in his version the fox does not flee into the wilderness, but stays at Mapertuus, while King Nobel extends the court day because of his reconciliation with Bruun and Ysegrim. A sequel of about 4300 lines has been added here, in which more charges are brought against Reynaert. At Nobel's court the fox defends himself against the accusations with the help of his clan. The trial ends in a judicial duel between Reynaert and Ysegrim, which the fox manages to decide in his favour. King Nobel next presents him with a high position in his realm. The text has been preserved in two manuscripts. The 'Brussels' manuscript (B), acquired in 1836 by the Koninklijke Bibliotheek in Brussels, where it is kept under shelfmark 14601, was produced around 1470 in the northern Low Countries, possibly in Utrecht, by a scribe who, according to two acrostics (in B 7805–7794) is called Claes van Aken.⁵⁴ The fragments (C), formerly in the possession of Hendrik van Wijn, were acquired by the Koninklijke Bibliotheek of The Hague in 1834, and are now kept under shelfmark 75 B 7. According to the colophon, these 'the Hague' fragments are the remnants of a manuscript that was produced

The text is available in a facsimile edition (De Keyser 1938), a diplomatic edition (Hellings 1952) and the critical edition by Wackers (2002), which replaces two nineteenth-century editions (Willems 1836; Martin 1874). in Holland in 1477. The text numbers 1055 lines, corresponding to B 6755-7793.⁵⁵ Reynaerts historie was long studied primarily as a 'textual link': on the one hand as an adaptation and, consequently, a source of Van den vos Reynaerde, on the other hand as an exemplar of the printed editions by Leeu, Caxton and others (see below). Only in the past few decades has literary appreciation of the text begun.

The verse text of Reynaerts historie was printed (probably unchanged) between 1487 and 1490 by Gheraert Leeu in Antwerp, illustrated with woodcuts, divided into chapters by Hinrek van Alckmer, and provided with summarizing chapter headings and prose moralisations.⁵⁶ Only seven leaves of this verse incunabulum (D) have survived (including four woodcuts), which are now kept in the University Library of Cambridge under shelfmark Inc. 4 F 6.2 (3367). The text corresponds to lines B 1513-88, 1639-55, 1753-72, 1780-890.⁵⁷ Hinrek van Alckmer's name occurs in the prologue to a Lower German adaptation of the verse incunabulum, Reynke de vos (R). The only complete copy of this edition, printed in Lübeck in 1498, which also has woodcuts, chapter headings and prose moralisations, is kept in the Herzog August-Bibliothek in Wolfenbüttel (shelfmark 32. / 4 Poet. rar.).⁵⁸ It should be noted that the text of Reynke de vos does not derive directly from D, but from a now lost Dutch printed edition.

As Reynke de vos, the poem made a triumphant conquest of Europe, now documented in great detail by Hubertus Menke in his international Reynaert bibliography.⁵⁹ The Low German text was reprinted up to 1660, translated into High German in 1544 and into Danish in 1555. Publications in Swedish and Icelandic were based on the Danish edition, while the High German translation was reprinted no fewer than twenty-one times up to 1617. It spawned a number of subgroups, among them a set of seven Latin printed texts (1567-1612). On the basis of Gottsched's High German prose translation of Reynke de vos from 1752, Goethe composed his famous adaptation in hexameters: Reineke Fuchs, In zwölf Gesängen (1794). This poem established a tradition of its own, with translations into many languages.

A Middle Dutch prose adaptation of Reynaerts historie had already been printed by Gheraert Leeu in Gouda in 1479 and by Jacob Jacobsz. van der Meer in Delft in

The so-called Reynaert chapbooks produced in the Low Countries can be divided into three groups.⁶² These are the sixteenth-century luxury publications by Plantijn (H1564, H1566), the chapbooks from the northern parts of the Low Countries (Hn: 16th-18th century) and those from the southern Low Countries (Hz: 17th-20th century).⁶³ Various printed editions must have been lost; some are known only because they are referred to somewhere, or are hypothetical. Each of the three groups is in its own way based on a reconstructed printed edition (H), for which material is believed to have been derived from the tradition of both D (prologue and illustrations) and P (prose text).⁶⁴ The adaptation techniques used in the chapbooks – abbreviation, simplification, moralisation, alteration of offensive passages (a frequent phenomenon in printed texts in the Southern Low Countries which were subject to ecclesiastical censure) – have proved rewarding objects of research.⁶⁵

The rediscovery at the beginning of the nineteenth century of the medieval manuscripts containing Van den vos Reynaerde in combination with the fascination with the past that Romanticism had aroused, created an immense interest in the Reynaert material. In the newly formed state of Belgium (dominated by a French-speaking elite) this interest was further strengthened by the 'flamingants', a Flemish emancipatory movement that drew upon the cultural achievements of their medieval ancestors to demand equal rights. Editions of the Middle Dutch texts, as well as a large number of modern adaptations for the entertainment of both adult and young readers were the result.⁶⁶ In Dutch literary histories, Van den vos Reynaerde now takes pride of place.

Text, translation and notes

About the translation – The English translation of Willem's Van den vos Reynaerde aims to present readers who are not familiar with Middle Dutch with a narrative that may be enjoyed in its own right, while it follows at the same time the Middle Dutch text as closely as is reasonably possible. Lines are kept parallel, unless this would result in distorted grammar and style, but any lack of parallelism never extends beyond two or three lines. Thus readers of the translation will find it easy to refer to the original text. Tenses in medieval – including Middle Dutch – texts tend to sway between present and past. These alternations have mostly been preserved in the translation as they rarely hinder comprehension. The anthropomorphic animals are referred to by pronouns usually reserved for human beings. For the names of the animals one form is used consistently in the translation; this is the form listed as headword in the Index of proper names.

1 A Middle Dutch story about Madoc has not come down to us, but there are strong indications that a work with this title did at one time exist. Willem's earlier tale probably told of a dream that Madoc had, as seems to be suggested in Maerlant's Rijmbijbel (cf. p. 16). Madoc is sometimes considered to have been a story about a seafarer's adventures.

6 It has been suggested that Van den vos Reynaerde was written by two poets and that Willem completed Arnout's unfinished work. However, serious objections may be raised to this notion of joint authorship. Assuming that the name was not an invention, it seems probable, also in view of the emphatic Walsch-Dietsch (French-Dutch) contrast in the lines before and after the name, that Arnout was a French Renart poet (cf. p. 15).

13 dorpren ('peasants') refers to non-courtly persons.

Prologue

- 1 Willem who made Madocke,
 which often kept him awake,
 was so extremely annoyed
 that the tales of Reynaert
- 5 – which Arnout has not finished – remained unwritten in Dutch that he had the life looked for and, following the French books,
 he began it in Dutch as follows.
- 10 May God favour us with his help!
 Now I am of a mind
 to urge at this beginning both peasants and fools whenever they happen to hear
- 15 the rhyme and these words (which are wasted on them), that they leave them unchanged.
 They too much resemble the raven who always thinks he knows it all.
- 20 They claim that many verses are untrue which they know no more about than I know what the people are called who now live in Babylon.
 If they were sensible, they would give up.
- 25 I am not saying this for myself.
 I would not have written this poem
 if a certain lady had not asked me who likes to conduct her affairs

23 Babilonien ('Babylon') is used here in a hyperbolic comparison to indicate a proverbially distant, foreign place. It may well be the case that the oblique reference to biblical Babylon, the scene of linguistic 'babel', is intentional. Genesis 11 describes how building the tower of Babel led to the rise of multiple languages and the resulting confusion and incomprehension among people.

26 Literally the Middle Dutch phrase reads: 'my poetry writing would only be silence'.

26-31 Willem claims to have written his verse romance at the request of a courtly lady, whom he does not, however, name. It is usually assumed that, rather than having a real, existing person in mind, the poet parodied the medieval custom of dedicating writings to the nobility, and especially to noble women.

King Nobel holds court

It was on a day at Whitsuntide
when trees and shrubbery alike were dressed all over with green leaves.
Nobel the King had had 45 his court-day proclaimed everywhere, which, he thought, – all being well –
would greatly increase his fame.
Then came to the king's court
all the animals, large and small,
50 except for Reynaert the fox alone.
He had behaved so badly at court
that he did not dare go.
Whoever is knowingly guilty, is afraid.
This was the case with Reynaert 55 and that is why he avoided the king's court where his esteem was low.
When the entire court had gathered
there was nobody, except the badger, who did not have some reason for complaining of opening scene of Van den vos Reynaerde stands in the tradition of many medieval Arthurian romances, in which the king holds court on Ascension Day or at Whitsun.

62-71 In the course of the court day Ysingrijn the wolf, supported by his relatives, brings charges against Reynaert. Medieval feudal society initially lacked a strong, central source of authority. The authorities usually prosecuted only after the injured party had made a formal complaint. See also the 'complaint' made by Cortoys, and by Pancer/Cuwaert and Canteleer later in the story.

72-77 In branch II of the Roman de Renart (Martin 1882-1887, 1027-1396) the fox finds himself in the wolves' lair by accident. After Haersint, the she-wolf, has agreed to have sexual intercourse with Reynaert, the latter urinates on her cubs and leaves the lair. Once her husband has returned, the she-wolf tries to convince him without much success that she has been raped. A few days later the two wolves chase the fox. When the she-wolf gets stuck in the 60 Reynaert, the scoundrel with the grey beard.

 Now a charge is made against him.
 Ysingrijn and his relatives took up their positions before the king.
 Ysingrijn began at once
 65 and said: 'My Lord King,
 for the sake of your nobility and of your honour,
 and for the sake of justice and of mercy,
 take pity on the harm
 inflicted upon me by Reynaert, 70 through whom I have often incurred great humiliation and loss.
 Take pity especially because he has had his way with my wife and has maltreated my children so badly 75 that, by pissing on them where they lay,
 two of them lost their sight
 and are now totally blind.
 In addition he later disgraced me.
 It had by then come to such a pass 80 that a day had been appointed when Reynaert should swear his innocence in court. But as soon as the relics were brought,
 he changed his mind 85 and escaped us in his stronghold.
 My lord, this is well known among the highest of those who have come here to court.
 Reynaert, that vicious animal, narrow entrance to the fox's den, she is raped, in full view of the approaching wolf, by Renart who has left his den by another exit. Ysingrijn's complaint concerns the rape; for obvious reasons he remains silent about his wife's adultery (cf. pp. 32-33).

73 verhoert is ambiguous; apart from meaning 'raped', it refers to sexual fulfilment.

79-85 Reynaert's escape when about to swear his innocence is seen in a different light when the story of Ysingrijn's devious plan, recounted in branch Va of the Roman de Renart, is taken into account (Martin 1882-1887, 1091-1272). There the fox flees because he discovers just in time that the holy relics on which he was to swear were in fact the teeth of the dog Roonel, who was shamming death. The wolf's biased version of events clearly demonstrates that he is dissembling (cf. p. 33).

- so vele te leede ghedaen,

Dies zwijghics nochtan,

Doe Ysengrijn dit hadde ghesproken,
stont up een hondekijn, hiet Cortoys, 100 ende claghede den coninc in Francsoys
hoet so arem was wijleneere dat alles goets en hadde meere

105 ende hem Reynaert, die felle man, [193rb]

Tybeert die cater die wart gram.
Aldus hi sine tale began ende spranc midden in den rinc 110 ende seide: ‘Heere coninc,

Hadder Cortoys yewet an,

97 no onversweghen: onversweghen may be a scribal error for versweghen, but it could also be argued that this is a slip of the tongue on Ysingrijn’s part (“nor not hushed up”).

107 Tybeert die cater: although the text specifies that Tybeert is a male cat or tomcat, we translate ‘cater’ as ‘cat’, in accordance with usual practice.

has done me so much harm;
 90 I am quite convinced:
 if all the cloth now made in Ghent were parchment, I should not have enough to describe it all.
 That is why I prefer to be silent about it, 95 but my wife's disgrace
 must neither be overlooked,
 nor not hushed up, nor remain without revenge.'

When Ysingrijn had spoken thus a small dog stood up, called Cortoys, 100 and complained to the king in French how a while ago it had been so poor that it had had nothing left one winter when there was a frost except for one sausage 105 and that Reynaert, the scoundrel, had stolen that very sausage from him.

Tybeert the cat was roused to fury.
 This is how he began his speech and he jumped into the middle of the circle 110 and he said: 'My Lord King, because you bear Reynaert ill will there is no one here, young nor old,
 or he has something to charge him with before you.
 What Cortoys is complaining of now 115 happened many a year ago.
 The sausage was mine, but I don't complain.
 I had got hold of it craftily
 when one night, looking for something to bag,
 I went into a mill
 120 where I stole the sausage from a sleeping miller.
 If Cortoys profited by it at all

107-25 Tybeert argues that Cortoys' complaint is not admissible: the sausage belonged to the cat, who in his turn had stolen it from a sleeping miller. As the miller was traditionally renowned for sexual prowess in the Middle Ages, the sausage may have ambiguous implications.

117 lust is ambiguous, meaning both 'clever trick' as well as 'lust'.

- dan was bi niemene dan bi mi.

Pancer de bever sprac: ‘Dinct hu goet,

140-41 King Nobel has proclaimed peace, which meant that his subjects were not allowed to carry weapons or to pursue old feuds. Reynaert’s attempt on Cuwaert’s life is, therefore, also a breach of the king’s peace. This undermines Nobel’s authority, as Pancer the beaver remarks at the end of his speech (165-69).

142-48 It has been suggested that the expressions maken capelaen (‘make chaplain’) and

- this was entirely my doing.
 It would only be right to dismiss

 Pancer the beaver spoke: ‘Do you think it right,
 Tybeert, that the complaint should be dismissed?
 Reynaert really is a murderer
 and a cheat and a thief.
 130 Also, there is nobody he likes so much,
 not even my lord the king,
 that he would not wish him to lose life and honour if that might get him
 a succulent bite of a chicken.
 135 And a trap, what do you say of that?
 Did he not yesterday, in broad daylight, perpetrate one of the worst crimes ever committed by any animal against Cuwaert the hare, standing here?
 140 For at a time when the king’s peace
 and safe conduct have been proclaimed, he promised to teach him the creed
 and to make him chaplain.
 Then he made him sit

 Together they began

zingen crede (‘sing the creed’) should be read as scabrous allusions to masturbation and sexual intercourse respectively. If this is correct, Reynaert and Cuwaert committed the sin that should not be named in the Middle Ages (the crimen nefandum): homosexual love. See in this context also 144-45. This interpretation is supported by a marginal decoration, depicting a very frightened hare with a bloodied bottom, holding a book (cf. Meuwese 2006).

Doe spranc up Grinbert die das, die Reynaerts broedersone was,
met eere verbolghenlike tale:
180 ‘Heere Ysengrijn, men weet dat wale ende hets een hout bijspel:
vians mont seit selden wel.
Verstaet, neemt miere talen goem:

162-64 The person bringing the charge can strengthen his case by supplying evidence. That is why Pancer points to his relative Cuwaert's fresh wounds. A well-known example from Germanic legal practice is the complaint with the dead man: the victim's body is brought to the court of law by his relatives and is shown when the charge is made. This is also the reason why Cantecleer will bring his daughter Coppe's dead body to the court on a bier (283-90).

177-282 In his plea for the defence Grimbeert the badger first proposes a reconciliation between the fox and Ysengrijn, Reynaert's most powerful enemy. He argues that this is the

his earlier lesson
 and was up to his old tricks and he had Cuwaert by the throat and would have bitten his head off 160 if I had not accidentally come to his aid at that moment.
 See here the fresh wounds
 as evidence, lord king,
 which Cuwaert sustained by his doing.
 165 If you leave unpunished in this way
 the disturbance of your peace,
 ignoring the verdict of your barons,
 it will be held against your children
 for many years to come.'
 170 'By God, Pancer, what you say is true,'
 said Ysingrijn from where he stood.
 'Lord, it would be a good thing for us all
 if Reynaert were dead, so help me God.
 But if he is pardoned for this,
 175 he is sure to trick within a month
 those of us who are not prepared for it.'
 Then Grimbeert the badger jumped up,
 who was Reynaert's brother's son,
 and spoke these angry words:
 180 'Lord Ysingrijn, as everyone surely knows and it is an old saying:
 Sweet words rarely fall from the enemy's mouth.
 Listen, pay attention to my words:
 I would wish that the one who 185 has caused the other most grief were hanged by the neck from a tree like a thief.

more appropriate as in his view the wolf has caused Reynaert more harm than the other way around (177-202). When this clever counter-accusation is called a lie (203-4), Grimbeert takes the time to support his claim (205-32), after which he disproves the actual charges made against the fox. He interprets the rape as adultery between courtly lovers, the theft of the sausage as the confiscation of stolen goods, and dismisses the attack on Cuwaert as a master's chastisement of a recalcitrant pupil (233-62). Finally Reynaert is depicted as a redeemed sinner who now lives the life of a hermit and fasts (263-82). For the first time in the story the problem of the relationship between rhetoric and reality is raised (cf. pp. 21-22).

187-88 Grimbeert suggests that the wolf should make a promise of reconciliation and accept a similar promise on the fox's part.

208-16 In branch III of the Roman de Renart the fox shams death in the middle of the road when a cart with a load of fish approaches. When he has been tossed on to the cart on account of his valuable pelt, he makes a meal of the fish (Martin 1882-1887, 1-164). Grimbeert twists

Lord Ysingrijn, should you wish to agree to a settlement,
 I will be pleased to assist.
 190 My uncle will not make objections either.
 And whoever is the worst miscreant,
 whether it be my uncle or you,
 he will owe the other party compensation.
 Even though he is not now appearing to make a complaint, 195 if my uncle's standing at court was high and if he enjoyed the king's favour
 – as you do, Lord Ysingrijn –
 the king would not approve of it and you would not escape punishment this time 200 for having ravaged his skin
 so often with your sharp teeth,
 while he had no way of taking revenge.'
 Ysingrijn spoke: 'Have you learned from your uncle to lie so blatantly?' 205 – 'I have not told any lies.
 You have deceived my uncle
 very often and in many different ways.
 You cheated him when he threw you
 the plaice from the cart, 210 while you followed him at a distance and picked up the best plaice with which you satisfied your hunger.
 You gave him nothing at all,
 except for the bones of one single plaice, 215 which you offered him
 because you did not fancy them any more.
 Later you cheated him with a side of bacon
 that had much fat on it and was very tasty, which you took between your jaws.

this story in such a way that it makes Ysingrijn appear in a bad light. In the badger's version Reynaert is in the wolf's company. In the same way as the wolf owes his success in appropriating a ham to the fox, showing his gratitude by leaving nothing but the string from which it was hung (217-19), he here devours the plaice that Reynaert throws down to him from the cart, leaving nothing but the bones of one single fish (cf. p. 31-32).

Wat talen mach daeromme wesen?
Nu maket heere Cuwaert, die hase,

Of hi den credo niet wel en las, 250 Reynaerd, die zijn meester was,
mochte hi sinen clerc niet blauwen?
Dat ware onrecht, entrauwen.

217-29 After the distorted story of the theft of the fish Grimbeert relates a shortened version of the theft of the ham in branch V of the Roman de Renart (Martin 1882-1887, 1-148). In this way the badger emphasizes once again the greed and malice of the wolf, who broke the agreement to share the booty and fobbed Reynaert off with the string for hanging the side of bacon.
236 al haer lijf is ambiguous; it means both ‘all her life’ and ‘with all her body’. Cf. also 1978, 1988.

220 When Reynaert demanded his share,
 you mocked him and said:
 "I should like to give you your share,
 Reynaert, my dear young man!
 The string from which the bacon was hung,
 225 chew on it, it is very greasy."
 Reynaert was little better off
 for having got hold of the fine side of bacon, with the risk that someone would catch him and toss him into his bag.
 230 This grief and this trouble
 he suffered through Ysingrijn's doing and a hunderd times more than I am telling you.
 My lords, don't you think this is enough?
 It is the more disgraceful 235 that he complains of his wife who has loved Reynaert
 all her life, and he her.
 Even though they did not make it known,
 I dare declare as the truth
 240 that for more than seven years
 Reynaert has had her faithful devotion.
 If a beautiful woman like Haersint accommodated Reynaert
 on account of her love and lecherous habits, 245 so what? She soon got over it.
 Why bother wasting words on it?
 Now Lord Cuwaert, the hare,
 is turning a trifle into a complaint.
 If he failed to read the creed as he should,
 250 why should not Reynaert, his master,
 be allowed to beat his pupil?
 Surely, that would not be right.

243 Manuscript F reads dur hoveschede instead of dor quade zede. The reading in the Comburg manuscript makes sense: by saying that the she-wolf loved Reynaert as she lacks decency, Grimbeert implies that he disapproves of Haersint's behaviour, hoping in this way to impress the king favourably. Nevertheless the reading in F fits the context better: after all, Grimbeert means to argue that the fox and the she-wolf are courtly lovers.

245 This line is ambiguous; it means both 'she soon got over it' and 'she soon reached a climax'.

257 Garbled Latin for 'male quaesita male perdita', literally: 'badly acquired, badly lost goods', or 'stolen goods never thrive'.

Cortoys complains of a sausage that he lost in a frost.
 255 The charge had better not been made:
 didn't you hear that it had been stolen?
Male quesite male perдите:
 It is right to lose in an unlawful way
 that which has been acquired by unlawful means.
 260 Who will blame Reynaert for confiscating stolen goods?
 Surely no one conversant with the law.

Reynaert is a law abiding man.
 Since the king proclaimed his peace 265 on pain of punishment,
 I know for a fact that he behaved no worse than
 if he were a hermit or a recluse.
 Next to his skin he wears a hair shirt.
 270 Within the past year he ate no meat,
 neither of wild nor tame animals.
 So someone said who yesterday came from there.
 He has left Malcroys,
 his castle, and has built a cell 275 where he now lives.
 He surely has no other possessions or income
 than the alms given him.
 Pale he is and thin with doing penance.
 280 Hunger, thirst, sharp chastisement
 he suffers for his sins.'

Just at that moment
 while Grimbeert thus stood pleading,
 they saw Canticleer 285 coming down the hill, who on a bier brought a dead hen called Coppe;

273 Malcroys, i.e. evil hole, is one of Reynaert's fortresses, but it is not his strongest. See also the note to line 512.

293-301 Cantaert is so famous that Lady Alente at one time named her cock after him. It is not impossible that historic persons (a noble lady and her lover?) are alluded to here, but part of the joke is also the interplay between fiction and reality. Cantaert is a fictional cock and owes his fame entirely to the story's author. In other words, in Willem's poem a 'cock'

Reynaert had bitten her head and neck off by the throat.
 290 This the king had to know.
 Canticleer walked in front of the bier,
 beating his wings vehemently.
 On either side of the bier walked a cock of renown.
 295 One was called Cantaert, whose name was in the past
 given to Lady Alente's noble cock.
 The other one was, if I am right,
 the noble cock Crayant, 300 the handsomest cock one might find between Brittany and Poland.
 Each of these cocks carried a lighted candle
 that was tall and straight.
 305 They were Coppe's two brothers, crying 'woe' and 'welaway'.
 For their sister Coppe's death
 they loudly complained and lamented.
 Pinte and Sproete carried the bier.
 310 They were deeply saddened
 by the loss of their sister.
 From a very large distance
 their joint lamentations might be heard.
 In this manner they arrived at the court.
 315 Canticleer jumped into the circle and said: 'Lord King,
 for God's sake and the sake of mercy,
 take pity on my distress,
 caused by Reynaert on me 320 and on my children who are standing here greatly aggrieved.

is named after a cock made famous by Willem's poem ... The other cock (just as much a literary creation) is called Crayant, na minen wane, 'if I am right', the narrator says, as if he is not quite sure and as if this cock really exists and struts around outside the poem, somewhere between Brittany and Poland.

322-420 The image of the enclosed, safe yard in springtime repeats the harmonious beginning of the tale (41-47) and contrasts sharply with the cruel conclusion of Cantecler's story. By producing a proclamation of peace with the king's seal appended and by posing as a pious

In early April when winter was gone away
 and the flowers were seen 325 in all the green fields, then I took pride and joy
 in my large offspring.
 I had eight young sons
 and seven young daughters 330 that were full of life and which the sensible hen Roede had given me in one brood.
 They were all plump and strong and walked about in a fair courtyard 335 enclosed by a wall.
 Inside it was a barn
 where many dogs were kept.
 As they cruelly tore apart many a beast,
 my children felt no fear.
 340 Reynaert could not bear the thought that they were so safe in there that he was unable to grab one.
 How often did he walk around the wall,
 Reynaert, that vicious neighbour,
 345 and set his traps for us!
 Whenever the dogs spotted him
 they pursued him with all their might.
 One day when they caught up with him
 by accident, near the ditch, 350 I saw how he paid to some extent for his thieving and robbing:
 the hairs of his pelt went flying about.
 Even so he escaped by a ruse.
 May God put a curse on him!
 355 Then, for a long time, he did not trouble us.
 Later he appeared dressed as a hermit, hermit (and pilgrim, which seems mutually exclusive), Reynaert lured the credulous cock and his children to the area outside the fence and killed one of them. Eventually the predatory fox made eleven victims. (See for the spatial aspects of the episode, pp. 23-24).

361-66 The cock thinks that the sealed proclamation reads that King Noble has proclaimed his peace. The fact that he does not express himself with greater certainty indicates that he lacks sufficient proficiency as a reader. Cantecleer meant to ascertain whether he and his family had nothing more to fear, but his reading ability fell short of a proper understanding of the text. Could it be that he only recognized a few (Latin?) words?

373 Elmare was a monastery between Aardenburg and Biervliet, near present-day Waterland-Oudeman. Founded in 1144, it was a priory of St Peter's Abbey in Ghent from the thirteenth century onwards. For reasons unknown Willem considers this monastery important: later in the story Elmare is referred to again (cf. 1483 and 1493).

378 Reynaert underpins his story by claiming that he has had his oath to refrain from meat

Reynaert, the murdering villain, and brought me a sealed writ
 to read, Lord King, 360 to which your seal was appended.
 When I began to read the letters
 I took them to signify that you, by your royal power, had declared in your entire kingdom 365 peace to all the animals and to all the birds as well.
 He also brought me other news
 and said that he had entered a reclusive order 370 and that he had often and most severely done penance for his sins.
 He showed me his pilgrim's staff and mantle
 that he had brought from Elmare Priory,
 a rough hair shirt underneath.
 375 Then he said: "Lord Canticleer, from now on you will be able to live without having to protect yourself from me.
 I have sworn on the stole to abstain from eating all meat and dripping.
 380 I am so old now that I must look after my soul.
 I commend you to God's care;
 I go where duty calls me.
 I am still to recite the daily Hours
 385 of sext, none, and prime today."
 Then, along a hedge and fat confirmed by a priest. The latter is said to have put the stole, the long shawl worn over his surplice, on Reynaert's head.

384-85 Reynaert lists a few of the liturgical hours in the wrong order. The Divine Office or Liturgy of the Hours is a set of daily prayers, said every twenty-four hours and divided into eight canonical hours (although in practice not always at three-hour intervals): matins (prayers said at midnight), lauds (at dawn), the four minor offices in the daytime: prime, terce, sext and none (originally prayers said at six, nine and twelve, and at three in the afternoon), vespers (evensong at sundown) and compline (the evening prayer before retiring). The fact that Reynaert's incorrect list fails to arouse Cantecleer's suspicions, indicates that the cock is no better acquainted with ecclesiastical life than the fox.

416-37 As Cantecler is able to support his complaint legally against Reynaert by showing Coppe's body, legal proceedings must now follow. The cock's story has made it abundantly clear that Reynaert has in no way bettered his life. Grimbeert, who finds his plea invalidated, he went his way that time,

 reciting the creed.
 I was glad and free from fear 390 and went to my children and was so completely off my guard
 that, with all my brood,
 I went outside the wall without a care.
 There it was that disaster befell me,
 395 for Reynaert, that evil piece of work,
 had crept through the hedge
 and had cut off our way to the gate.
 Then one of my children
 was rapidly taken from the group;
 400 Reynaert led it into his stomach.
 Evil events awaited me then,
 for when he had had a taste of her
 with his greedy mouth, neither guards nor our dogs 405 were able to shield or protect us.
 Lord, may this arouse your pity:
 Reynaert set his traps
 both by night and by day
 and continually robbed me of my children.
 410 Their number is now so diminished from what it used to be that my fifteen children are now reduced to four;
 so thoroughly has that cruel Reynaert 415 devoured them with his maw.
 It was only yesterday that the dogs,
 chasing him, retrieved Coppe of great repute
 who is lying here on this bier.
 With great distress I bring this charge before you.
 420 Take pity on me, dear Lord!
 The king said: 'Grimbeert the badger, remains silent. The king announces that he will consult his counsellors as to the proper way to punish Reynaert after Coppe's burial.

438-49 Noble gives orders for the officium defunctorum, the office for the dead, to be held (cf. the Rituale Romanum, Tit. VI, Cap. IV, dating prior to Vaticanum II). It concerns a wake (cf. vygelyen, 440), during which a prescribed series of texts and prayers was sung and recited for the soul of the deceased, spread over three liturgical hours: vespers, matins and lauds. The office begins with the antiphone 'placebo domino in regione vivorum' ('I will please the Lord in the land of the living'). These and other antiphones, short hymns, precede and follow the recitation of various psalms (cf. der zielen vers, 448); during matins three times three readings from the Book of Job (cf. die zielen lesse, 449) alternate with sung responses.

your uncle, who was a hermit,
 certainly kept up his fast!
 Give me a year and I'll show him!
 425 Now listen, Canticleer,
 what more is there to say?
 Your daughter lies here murdered.
 May God have mercy on her soul.
 We cannot keep it here any longer
 430 – it is now at God's command – and we shall sing the vigil mass.
 Afterwards we shall commit the body
 to the earth honourably.
 Next we shall take counsel 435 with these lords and discuss how best to take revenge on Reynaert for this murder.'
 Having spoken these words
 he ordered young and old 440 to sing the vigil mass.
 What he ordered was done at once.
 Then one could hear how the placebo domino
 was begun very loudly 445 as well as the verses following.
 If it would not take too long
 I would certainly also have mentioned who sang the antiphones there and who read the lesson.
 450 When the vigil had ended
 Coppe was laid in the grave
 that had been made with ingenuity

446-49 For the first time in the story the narrator positions himself firmly as a commentator on the story. Using the pronoun 'I', he informs his public that he has shortened his account somewhat to avoid long-windedness. For other passages where the narrator addresses the public, using the personal pronoun 'I' to comment on his story, see 298, 648, 806, 1756, 1873-74, 2176-78, 2546-47, 2921-26, 3016-21, 3433. The narrator also guides the tale's reception by addressing his public directly, as in 702, 872, 2833-34, 2885-88. Questions serve to involve the public in the action, as in 647, 689, 747, 753, 961, 1075, 2548, 2926. He draws its attention with the formula Nu hoert (877, 970, 1430, 2164, 2238, 2799, 2841, 2849, 2899, 3049, 3317) or Nu verneemt (2227).

462 Literally: 'who was so good at scratching'. The word scraven has sexual overtones.

466-78 King Nobel does not decide unilaterally what legal action needs to be taken. He sends for his barons who agree that Reynaert must be summoned to court for criminal under the lime tree in a patch of grass.

 Of polished marble was 455 the stone on it.
 The letters that one saw on it made it clear
 who lay buried there.
 This is what the letters 460 on the gravestone read:
 'Here lies Coppe,
 who ever joyfully ranged free,
 bitten to death by Reynaert the fox who did her family cruel injury.'
 465 Coppe now lies under the soil.
 The king said to his councillors that they should discuss among themselves how best to avenge
 this great crime.
 470 Then they all agreed in their advice to the king that he should order him
 to come to court,
 and that nothing, good or bad, 475 should prevent his attendance at the trial,
 and that Bruun should be the one to be charged with the message.
 On this matter the king took a decision without delay,
 addressing Bruun the bear therefore as follows:
 480 'Lord Bruun, I say this before this assembly,
 that you must take the message.
 Also, I urge you to act wisely,
 and to beware of deceit;
 Reynaert is wicked and mischievous.
 485 He will flatter you, and tell lies.
 If he can, he will hoodwink you with false and fine words.

prosecution, and that Bruun the bear is to deliver the summons. The king complies with their decision (cf. also 165-69, 432-37). Decisions are taken in feudal harmony during the trial and conviction. It is after the conviction that tensions arise (cf. p. 25).

Mach hi, bi Gode, hi sal hu honen.
'Heere,' seit hi, 'laet hu castyen!
490 So moete mi God vermalendyen of mi Reynaert so sal honen, inne saelt hem wederlonen,
dat hijs an den dulsten zi.
Nu ne zorghet niet om mi.'
495 Nu neemt hi orlof ende hi sal naken
Daer hi zeere sal mesraken!

Nu es Brune up die vaert
ende hevet in ziere herten onwaert
ende het dochte hem overdaet 500 dat yement soude sijn so quaet
ende dat hem Reynaert hoenen soude.
Dort doncker van eenen woude
quam hi gheloepen dor eene wostine daer Reynaert hadde de pade sine 505 gheslegghen crom ende menichfoude, also als hi huten woude
hadde gheloepen om sijn bejach.
Beneden der woestinen lach
een berch oech ende lanc.
510 Daer moeste Bruun sinen ganc te middewaerde over maken, sal hi te Manpertus gheraken.
Reynaerd hadde so menich huus,
maer die casteel Manpertus
515 dat was die beste van sinen borghen.

495-96 The narrator comments that Bruun will meet a bad end. In this way, after Nobel's earlier warning that Bruun must beware of the wicked fox's tricks (482-88), he heightens the suspense for his public. Rather than asking themselves whether or not the bear is going to be duped, they will have wondered how this is going to happen. Various comments by the narrator in what follows (611, 638-43, 1075-80, 2164-78, 3295) and explicit asides by Reynaert (623-26, 2034-49) serve the same function (cf. p. 22).

502-12 By describing Bruun's journey through a variety of landscapes the narrator indicates

By God, he will disgrace you if he can.'
 'My Lord,' said he, 'stop these admonitions!
 490 May God's curse be upon me
 if Reynaert disgraces me in such a way that I shall not be able to repay in kind, making him look silly.
 Do not worry on my account.'
 495 Now he takes his leave and will arrive in a place where he will encounter much misfortune!

First summons

Now Bruun is on his way
 and he considers it unlikely in his heart and it seemed to him absurd 500 that anyone would be so wicked and that Reynaert would disgrace him.
 Through the darkness of a forest
 he made his way through a wasteland where Reynaert had made his tracks 505 crooked and manifold,
 each time when he had left the forest
 to go hunting.
 On the other side of the wasteland was a mountain, high and broad.
 510 Bruun had to make his way across it in the middle to reach Manpertuus.
 Reynaert had very many residences,
 but the castle of Manpertuus 515 was the best of his strongholds.

that the bear now enters a different world. He leaves the ordered world of the court and enters the trackless wilderness where Reynaert is lord and master. Here and elsewhere, the spatial transition also clearly implies a moral lapse (cf. pp. 23-24).

512 In the Roman de Renart, Renart's strongest fortress is sometimes called Maupertuis in addition to Malpertuis. It is likely that the scribe of the Comburg manuscript (or a predecessor) took the third letter of the word for an -n. Like Malcroys the name means 'evil hole'.

Daer trac hi in als hi in zorgen
ende in noede was bevaen.
Nu es Brune die beere ghegaen
dat hi te Manpertuus es comen, 520 daer hi de porte hevet vernomen
daer Reynaerd hute plach te gane.
Doe ghinc hi voer die barbecane sitten over sinen staert
ende sprac: 'Sidi in huus, Reynaert?
525 Ic bem Bruun, des coninx bode. [195vb]
Die hevet ghezworen bi sinen Gode, ne comdi niet ten ghedinghe
ende ic hu niet voer mi bringhe,
recht te nemene ende te ghevene 530 ende in vreden voert te levene, hi doet hu breken ende raden.
Reynaerd, doet dat ic hu rade ende gaet met mi te hove waert.'
Dit verhoerde al nu Reynaert, 535 die voer in sine poerte lach, daer hi vele te ligghene plach
dor waremhede van der zonnen.
Bi der tale die Bruun heeft begonnen
bekenden althant Reynaert 540 ende tart bet te dale waert
in sine donckerste haghedochte.
Menichfout was zijn ghedochte
hoe hi vonde sulken raet
daer hi Bruun, den fellen vraet, 545 te scherme mede mochte driven ende selve bi ziere eeren bliven.

522 The barbecane ('barbican') is a barricade which forms the outer defence of the castle.

531 breken ende raden: to break someone's bones and subsequently place him on a wheel.

547-622 Reynaert misleads Bruun by stressing the futility of his journey, saying that he would have gone to King Nobel's court day anyway, if only he had not eaten far too much of some new kind of food. Bruun reacts immediately. On his arrival the bear had addressed Reynaert formally (Sidi in huus? 524), as befits his role as the king's messenger. But now that his craving has been aroused, he forgets his official role and changes to an informal mode of address (wat haetstu, 562). The bear is no longer master of himself, as is also clear from

That is where he went when he was afraid and found himself in dire straits.

Now Bruun has walked so far that he has arrived at Manpertuus, 520 where he spotted the gate
where Reynaert customarily went out.
Then, in front of the barbican,
he sat down on his tail
and said: 'Are you at home, Reynaert?
525 It's me, Bruun, the messenger of the king who has sworn this oath by his God:
if you do not come to the trial
and if I fail to bring you with me to subject yourself to the law 530 and to live in peace in the future,
he shall have you broken on the wheel.
Reynaert, do as I advise,
and come with me to court.'
All this was heard by Reynaert, 535 who was lying just inside his porch,
as he often did
on account of the warmth of the sun.
By the words that Bruun had begun to speak
Reynaert recognized him at once 540 and he withdrew further into the darkest part of his den.
Many thoughts went through his mind
how to devise a plan
by means of which he might 545 trick Bruun, the greedy glutton, without loss of honour to himself.

the fact that he addresses Reynaert as neve, 'nephew' (581), which does not refer to a family relationship, but to Bruun's intention to be on good terms with Reynaert. As Reynaert deliberately pretends to be unaware of what Bruun is trying to do (585, 588-91, 595, 601), Bruun gets increasingly worked up. A similar kind of dynamics is found in the superlatives by which the quantities of honey to be supplied or consumed are indicated (592-93, 598-600, 602-4, 619, 637). Reynaert's hyperbolic language serves the purpose of provocation, while Bruun's is coloured by greed and boastfulness. On the structure of Reynaert's tricks, see also p. 20.

- Doe sprac Reynaert overlanc: ‘Huwes goets raets hebbet danc,
heere Bruun, wel soete vrient.
550 Hi hevet hu qualic ghedient die hu beriet desen ganc ende hu desen berch lanc
over te loepene dede bestaen.
Ic soude te hove sijn ghegaen, 555 al haddet ghi mi niet gheraden, maer mi es den buuc so gheladen
ende in so utermaten wijse met eere vremder nieuwer spise, ic vruchte in sal niet moghen gaen.
560 Inne mach sitten no ghestaen;
ic bem so utermaten zat.’
‘Reynaert, wat haetstu, wat?’ ‘Heere Brune, ic hat crancke have.
Arem man dannes gheen grave;
565 dat mooghdi bi mi wel weten.
Wi aerme liede, wi moeten heten,
hadden wijs raet, dat wi node haten. [196ra] Goeder versscher honichraten hebbic couver arde groet.
570 Die moetic heten dor den noet,
als ic hel niet mach ghewinnen.
Nochtan als icse hebbe binnen, hebbicker af pine ende onghemac.’
Dit hoerde Brune ende sprac:
575 ‘Helpe, lieve vos Reynaert, hebdi honich dus onwaert?
Honich es een soete spijs die ic voer alle gherechten prijse ende voer alle gherechten minne.
580 Reynaerd, helpt mi dat ics ghewinne.
Edele Reynaert, soete neve,
also langhe als ic sal leven
willic hu daeromme minnen.
Reynaerd, helpt mi dat ics ghewinne.’
585 ‘Ghewinnen, Bruun? Ghi hout hu spot!’

Then Reynaert said after a long time:
 ‘Many thanks for your good advice,
 Lord Bruun, dear friend.
 550 He did you a disservice,
 the person who suggested that you make this journey and had you cross
 this mountain range.
 I would have gone to court, 555 even if you had not advised me to do so,
 but my stomach is so full and in such an excessive way with some strange new food that I fear that I shall not be able to go.
 560 I can neither sit nor stand,
 I am so extremely full.’
 – ‘Reynaert, what did you eat? what?’
 – ‘Lord Bruun, I have eaten poor quality food.
 A poor man is no count,
 565 that is obvious when you look at me.
 We poor people have to eat things that,
 if we had the choice, we would never eat.
 Good, fresh honeycombs
 I have in stock aplenty.
 570 Those I must eat out of necessity
 when I cannot get anything else.
 But when I have swallowed them,
 I suffer pain and discomfort as a result.’
 Bruun heard this and said:
 575 ‘Help, my dear fox Reynaert,
 do you despise honey so much?
 Honey is delicious food,
 which I appreciate above all other dishes
 and love more than any other dish.
 580 Reynaert, help me get it.
 Noble Reynaert, dear nephew,
 so long as I live
 I shall love you for it.
 Reynaert, help me get it.’
 585 – ‘Get it, Bruun? You must be joking!’

- 'In doe, Reynaert, so waer ic zot, hildic spot met hu, neen ic niet.'
 Reynaert sprac: 'Bruun, mochtij's yet?
 Of ghi honich moghet heten,
 590 bi huwer trauwen, laet mi weten.
 Mochtij's yet, ic souts hu saden.
 Ic saels hu so vele beraden,
 ghi ne hatet niet met hu tienē,
 waendic hu hulde daermet verdienen.'
 595 'Met mi tienē? Hoe mach dat wesen?
 Reynaert, hout huwen mont van desen
 ende sij's seker ende ghewes:
 haddic al thonich dat nu es
 tusschen hier ende Portegale, 600 ic haet al up teenen male.'
 Reynaerd sprac: 'Bruun, wat sechdi?
 Een dorper, heet Lamfroit, woent hier bi,
 hevet honich so vele tewaren,
 ghi ne hatet niet in VII jaren.
 605 Dat soudic hu gheven in hu ghewout, heere Brune, wildi mi wesen hout ende voer mi dinghen te hove.'
 Doe quam Brune ende ghinc gheloven
 ende sekerde Reynaerde dat: [196rb] 610 wildine honichs maken zat
 – des hi cume ombiten sal –
 hi wilde wesen overal
 ghestade vrient ende goet gheselle.
 Hieromme louch Reynaert die felle 615 ende sprac: 'Bruun, heelt mare, verghave God dat mi nu ware
 also bereet een goet gheval alse hu dit honich wesen sal,
 al wildij's hebben VII hamen.'
 620 Dese woort sijn hem bequame, Bruun, ende daden hem so sochte,
 hi louch dat hi nemmee ne mochte.

611 Understatement, meaning that he will not eat anything at all.

- ‘I am not, Reynaert, I’d be a fool to joke with you, no, not me.’
 Reynaert said: ‘Bruun, would you like some of it?
 If you want to eat honey,
 590 on your word of honour, let me know.
 If you want some, I could make you eat your fill.
 I shall give you so much that ten of you would not be able to eat it if in that way I would earn your loyal support.’ 595 – ‘Ten of us? How can that be?
 Reynaert, say no more about this and know for certain and a fact:
 if I had all the honey between here and Portugal,
 600 I would eat it all up in one go.’
 Reynaert said: ‘Bruun, what’s that you’re saying?
 A villager, who is called Lamfroyt, lives near here,
 and he has so much honey, truly,
 that you could not eat it in seven years.
 605 I would put it at your disposal, provided,
 Lord Bruun, that you are prepared to take my side and plead for me at court.’
 Then Bruun solemnly promised and assured Reynaert 610 that if the latter was prepared to stuff him with honey – of which he will hardly have a taste –
 he would be willing, in all circumstances,
 to prove a loyal friend and good companion.
 This amused that scoundrel Reynaert, 615 and he said: ‘Bruun, hero of renown,
 if only God were to afford me
 as much happiness
 as this honey will give you,
 even if you wanted seven barrels of it.’
 620 These words pleased Bruun much,
 and he found them so agreeable that he laughed himself silly.

Doe peinsde Reynaerd daer hi stoet:
'Bruun, es mine avonture goet, 625 ic wane hu daer noch heden laten daer ghi sult lachen te maten.'
Na dit peinsen ghinc Reynaert huut
ende sprac al overluut:
'Oem Bruun, gheselle, willecome!
630 Het staet so: suldi hebben vrome,
hier ne mach zijn gheen langher staen.
Volghet mi; ic sal voeren gaen.
Wi houden desen crommen pat.
Ghi sult noch heden werden zat,
635 saelt na minen wille gaen.
Ghi sult noch heden hebben sonder waen
also vele als ghi moghet ghedraghen.' Reynaert meende van groten slaghen;
dit was dat hi hem beriet.
640 Die keytijf Bruun ne wiste niet
waer hem Reynaerd die tale keerde, die hem honich stelen leerde
dat hi wel seere sal becoepen.
Al sprekende quam dus gheloepen

655 Die eecke was ontdaen wel wijde.
Des was Reynaert arde blide.
Te Brunen sprac hi ende louch:
'Siet hier hu grote ghevouch,

626 Understatement, meaning that he will not find anything to laugh about at all.

629 By addressing Bruun as 'uncle' Reynaert follows the example of the bear, who earlier

Then Reynaert thought to himself:
 'Bruun, if all goes well for me,
 625 I think I'll leave you even today in a place where you will not laugh much.'
 Having thought this, Reynaert went outside and said loudly:
 'Uncle Bruun, dear friend, welcome!
 630 The matter is this: if you wish to profit
 we should not stay here any longer.
 Follow me; I'll lead the way.
 We follow this crooked path.
 You will have your fill today
 635 if all goes as I wish.
 Without doubt, this very day you will get
 as much as you can bear.'
 Reynaert meant a severe beating;
 that was what he had in mind for him.
 640 Bruun the dunce did not get the meaning of Reynaert's words, who was teaching him to steal honey
 that he will pay for dearly.
 Talking in this way Reynaert 645 arrived with his companion Bruun
 at the fence around Lamfroyt's house.
 Do you want to hear about Lamfroyt?
 He was – if it is true what people told me –
 a carpenter of good repute, 650 and had brought to his yard
 an oak tree from the forest that he intended to split in two and in which he had knocked two wedges,
 as carpenters do to this day.
 655 The oak had been split open very wide.
 That pleased Reynaert greatly.
 Laughing, he said to Bruun:
 'See here your heart's desire, called him 'nephew' (581). At the same time their hierarchical positions are highlighted: the bear is mightier than the fox.

- Brune, ende nemet wel goem.
660 Hier in desen selven boem

670 Brune sprac: ‘Reynaert, ne sorghet niet.
Waendi dat ic bem onvroet?
Mate es tallen spele goet.’
‘Ghi secht waer,’ sprac Reynaerd.
‘Waeromme bem ic oec vervaert?’
675 Gaet toe ende crupet daerin.’
Reynaert peinsde om zijn ghewin
ende Brune liet hem so verdoren
dat hi thoeft over die horen
ende die twee voerdere voete instac.

672 The bear is quite able to quote the proverb about moderation (a peculiarly courtly virtue), but he does not know how to apply it in what follows. In a subtle way the author has

- Bruun. Now take note.
 660 Here in this very tree
 there is an exceptional amount of honey.
 Try to get it down your throat
 and into your stomach.
 But you will have to control yourself:
 665 however tasty you think the honeycombs, mind your manners and eat moderately,
 so it does not disagree with you.
 I would be disgraced and dishonoured,
 dearest uncle, if any mishap befell you.’
 670 Bruun said: ‘Reynaert, don’t worry.
 Do you take me for a fool?
 Moderation in everything.’
 ‘What you say is true,’ said Reynaert.
 ‘Anyway, why should I worry?’
 675 Go, and get inside.’
 Reynaert pondered his good luck and Bruun allowed himself to be fooled to such an extent that he inserted his head, ears and all, as well as his two front paws.
 680 And Reynaert did his utmost to wrench the two wedges out of the oak –
 he who had earlier talked so smoothly.
 Bruun ended up caught in the tree.
 Now the nephew has caused his uncle 685 such problems with his devious plans that, neither by ingenuity nor by force,
 is there an escape for him in any way,
 and he is held captive by the head.
 What would you advise Bruun to do?
 690 That he was strong and brave will not be any help to him now.
 He realized that he had been duped.
 He started to howl and to growl.
 He had got trapped with his muzzle already been playing with the moderation-immoderation alternation before this (557, 561, 626, 661, 666).

705-6 Preparing and pouring or drinking beverages is a sarcastic reference to inflicting or experiencing physical abuse (see also 1955, 2173-78 and 2801). Making sauces (1216) also belongs to this type of ‘special treat’ metaphors.

695 and front paws so tightly that all his efforts were in vain.
 He thought he'd never escape.
 Reynaert stood at a distance
 and saw Lamfroyt coming, 700 who carried on his shoulder both a sharp hatchet and a battle axe.
 Here you may hear of Reynaert
 and how he began to mock his uncle:
 'Uncle Bruun, tuck in!
 705 Here comes Lamfroyt, ready to pour.
 Having eaten one should drink!'

Having said this, Reynaert returned to his castle, without taking leave. And just then 710 Lamfroyt saw the bear and noticed that he had got trapped.
 He did not hesitate for a moment.
 He hurriedly made his way to where he knew help was at hand 715 in the nearest village, and told everyone
 that a bear stood trapped.
 Then a huge army followed him:
 in the village neither man nor woman stayed behind.
 720 To take the bear's life
 all who could walk came along.
 One brought a broom,
 another a flail; one brought a pitchfork,
 another came running with a stick, 725 just as they left their work.
 Even the priest from the church brought a staff with a crucifix,
 which the verger had reluctantly given him.
 The verger carried a church banner

722-30 The weapons carried by the villagers are ludicrous. They want to attack the bear with objects used in the home and in the fields. In this context it is not surprising that the priest intends to attack Bruun with a crucifix.

731 Priests were forbidden to enter into a sexual relationship, although the reality was often different in the Middle Ages. This means that officially the pape who has a wife (or concubine) and children (cf. 1171 and 1236) lives in sin. It is likely that he enjoyed considerable sexual favours,

- 730 with which to hit and to prod.
 The priest's wife, Lady Julocke, came running up with her distaff
 with which she had been spinning.
 In front of them all ran
- 735 Lamfroyt with a sharp axe.
 Even though Bruun was not very comfortable,
 he feared more misery
 and made a tremendous effort
 when he heard the noise.
- 740 He jumped up, so that all the skin was torn from his face.
 Although Bruun extricated his head
 with a great deal of trouble,
 he nevertheless lost in the process
- 745 one ear and both his cheeks.
 Never did God create such a hideous animal!
 How could he possibly fare worse?
 Even though he had pulled out his head,
 before he could free his paws
- 750 his nails as well as his two gloves stayed behind.
 In this way he got out with great pain.
 How could he have been more dishonoured?
 His feet hurt so badly
- 755 that he could not bear to walk.
 Blood ran into his eyes,
 so that he could not see properly.
 He dared neither stay nor flee.
- Under the sun, from the south, he saw
- 760 Lamfroyt come running up, followed by the priest, that worthy,
 who came running fast;
 after him the verger with the banner;
 and after him all the parishioners,

as Julocke's name characterizes her as a temptress: *ju lokke literally means 'you I tempt'.

751 With the reference to the two gloves, the skin on Bruun's paws is meant.

758 The point here is that Bruun is paralyzed by fear.

777-819 The way Bruun is maltreated is a parody on skirmishes during battle in medieval narratives. A famous example is the Chanson de Roland, in which the rearguard of Charlemagne's army is ambushed near Roncevaux. In one episode the narrator explains at great length how the Frankish commander Roland and his companions Gerin, Gerer, Sansun, Anseïs, Engeler, Oton, Berenger and Margariz exert themselves in the first few fights with the Saracens (cf. Segre & Tys-

765 old people as well as young.
 Next there came, leaning on a stick,
 many an old hag with barely
 a tooth left in her mouth from old age.
 If you're interested, pay heed to this:
 770 he who suffers harm or loss and great distress
 is everyone's butt!
 Poor Bruun soon found this out.
 Many were after his skin
 775 who would have kept very quiet
 if Bruun could have done as he wished.
 It was on the bank of a river
 that Bruun, most miserable of all animals,
 was surrounded by many villagers.
 780 Little was said at that time.
 Great discomfort was in store for him:
 some hit him, others stabbed him,
 some hit him, others threw things at him.
 Lamfroyt caused him the sharpest pain.
 785 Lottram Lancvoet, as one man was called, carried a stick with horn cladding
 which he constantly aimed at his eye.
 Lady Vulmaerte wielded a stick until the pain made him piss himself.
 790 Abelquac and my Lady Bave
 both lay on the ground and together fought for one of his balls.
 Ludmoer with the long nose was carrying a lead ball on a cord 795 and was swinging it around.
 Ludolf with the crooked fingers set an example to all of them,
 for he was of the highest birth,

sens 2003, laisse XCVI-CIV). The participants in the fight in Van den vos Reynaerde are no knights, but villagers with comical and suggestive names. Moreover, their weapons and their actions – they try to put out one of Bruun's eyes and fight over one of his testicles – are totally unchivalric. By this kind of uncourtly struggle Bruun, who left the court as a confident hero, is made ridiculous.
788-89 Literally: 'Lady Vulmaerte boiled sharp lye / for him with a stick'.

826-36 Bruun owes his escape entirely to the fact that in his anguished state he pushes five women into the river. When the priest sees that Julocke is one of them, he abuses the clerical with the sole exception of Lamfroyt.

 800 Hugheliyn with the crooked legs was his father, as is well-known,
 and was born in Abstale
 and he was the son of Lady Ogerne, who mended lanterns for a living.
 805 Other men and women
 more than I can name, caused Bruun great distress,
 so that he lost much blood.
 Bruun was on the receiving end 810 from every side.
 The priest brought down the staff and crucifix
 ceaselessly upon him, blow upon blow,
 and the verger with the banner attacked him with gusto.
 815 Lamfroyt approached at that moment with a sharp axe
 and hit him between neck and head;
 Bruun was so dazed
 that he jumped aside because of the blow, 820 between the river and the hedge,
 into the middle of a group of old women,
 and pushed five of them into the river that ran there and that was quite wide and deep.
 825 The priest's wife was one of them.
 That little pleased the priest.
 When he saw his wife in the river
 he was no longer interested in stabbing or hitting Bruun.
 830 He shouted: 'Look, worthy parishioners,
 there floats Lady Julocke with her spindle and her distaff.
 Whoever can help her, go!
 I will give him for a year and a day

means of obtaining grace by promising the villagers pardons for sins (yet to be committed) in return for getting his wife back onto dry land.

860 The stupen, the stocks or pillory, refers to the half-split oak in which Bruun is caught with his head and paws.

Bruun lying there for dead

to go with ropes and with hooks.
While they pulled the woman out,
Bruun reached the river
and quickly swam away from them all.
- 845 All the villagers were angry:
they saw that Bruun swam away from them,
so that they could not follow him.
They stood on the river bank, incensed,
and started to hurl abuse at him.
- 850 Bruun was lying in the river
where the current was strongest for him.
Floating along, he prayed that God would curse and damn the tree in which he had left his ear 855 and both his cheeks.
Next he cursed that vicious animal,
the wicked fox Reynaert,
who, with his brown beard,
had so deeply made him dive into that oak.
- 860 Next Lamfroyt, on account of the stocks
by means of which he had suffered so.
Engaged in prayers of this nature
Bruun floated for such a long time that he had drifted at least half a mile

where the villagers had been left behind.
He was exhausted and tired
and weakened by loss of blood, causing him to make slow progress.
- 870 Then he swam towards the land

875 Bruun is shaking because he is out of breath.

903-8 Reynaert's monologue provides important information about his intentions. He had planned to kill the bear in such a way that he could not be held accountable. He intended to remove a redoubtable opponent through Lamfroyt, which would have enabled him to insist and crawled up on the bank to lie down there.

You never saw a more pitiable animal or human being!
He lay there moaning woefully,
875 shaking with both his sides.
He had Reynaert to thank for it all.
Now hear what Reynaert did!
He had caught a plump chicken
in the field near Lamfroyt's house 880 before going on his way.
He had carried it to a hill,
far from any road,
where it was completely deserted.
That was what he wanted,
885 because no one went there and he would not be forced by any one to give up his prey.
When he had led the chicken
into his stomach, except for the feathers, 890 he went down the hill
along a secret track.
He was extremely full.
The weather was fine and hot.
He had been running until the sweat
895 ran down his cheeks.
That is why he went to the river,
so that he might cool off.
His heart was filled with very great joy for many reasons.
900 He felt pretty sure that Lamfroyt had killed the bear
and had dragged it to his house.
Then he said: 'It went well for me.
The one who would harm me most at court 905 has been killed today through my doing.

later at court that he knew nothing of the summons. However, it immediately becomes clear that Reynaert's plan has come to nothing: Bruun is still alive. The narrator thus sheds an ironic light on Reynaert's plans and character.

Nochtan wanic sonder claghe ende sonder wanconst bliven.
Ic mach te rechte bliscap driven.’
Doe Reynaert was in dese tale, 910 sach hi nederwaert te dale ende vernam Bruun daer hi lach.
Enten eersten als hine sach,
hadde hijs rauwe ende toren.
Daer die bliscap was tevoren, 915 daer lach nu thoren ende nijt
ende sprac: ‘Vermalendijt, Lamfroyt, moet dijn herte sijn!
Du best dulre dan een zwijn,
Lamfroyt, ergher putensone!
920 Lettel eeren bestu ghewone.
Hoe es di dese beere ontgaen,

Hoe menich morseel legghet deran,
dat gherne hetet menich man.
925 O wy, Lamfroyt, verscroven druut, hoe rikelike een beerehuut
heefstu heden verloren,
die di ghewonnen was tevoren!’
Dit scelden hevet Reynaert ghelaten 930 ende ghinc neder bi der straten
dor te siene hoet Bruun stoet.
Doe hine sach ligghen al een bloet
ende ziec ende onghesont,
den aermen beere, te dier stont
935 – Dat sach Reynaert arde gherne –

‘Siere priester, dieu vo saut!
Kendi Reynaert, den rybaut?
Wildine scauwen, so siettene hier,
940 den roden scalc, den fellen ghier.

930 The strate (‘road’) offers a contrast with the secret track that the fox used earlier (891).
936-51 When Reynaert’s tricks have been successful, he mocks his victims, a common feature of beast tales. This also happens in Bruun’s case, whose impending beating was earlier compared to a drinking bout (704-6). Here he is likened to a cleric on account of the lack of

And yet I do not expect to be charged or suspected.
I have every reason to be glad.'

While speaking these words 910 Reynaert looked down and saw Bruun lying there.
And as soon as he saw him,
he felt sad and angry.
His earlier joy
915 now gave way to fury and irritation
and he said: 'Damned, Lamfroyt, you deserve to be!
You have less sense than a pig,
Lamfroyt, horrible son of a whore!
920 Even a little respect is too much for you.
How did this bear escape you,
which earlier had been caught for you?
There are many delicious morsels on it which many would like to eat.
925 Dear me, Lamfroyt, useless fellow,
what a precious bearskin
did you lose today
which earlier had been won for you!'

Reynaert stopped his abuse 930 and went down to the road to see how Bruun was doing.
When he saw him lying there,
the poor bear, covered in blood
injured and in a bad state, 935 – Reynaert took pleasure in seeing it –
he taunted him for his amusement:
'My lord priest, Dieu vos saut!
Do you know the villain Reynaert?
If you want to see him, then you see him here, 940 the red scoundrel, the wicked glutton.

skin on his scalp and skinless paws. His head injury is compared by Reynaert to a skull cap and an outsize tonsure, while the wounds on his paws are associated by the fox with discarded gloves (cf. p. 21).

937 Old French dieu vos saut means: 'may God protect you'.

Seght mi priester, soete vrient,

954 In other words: he could no longer stand it.

961-81 After the painful escape from the half-split oak, the beating by the villagers and Reynaert's cruel taunts, Bruun's humiliation is still not over. His front paws lack skin and

Tell me, priest, dear friend,

 which Order do you intend to join,
 as you are wearing a red hat?
 945 Are you an abbot or prior?
 Whoever gave you this tonsure
 sheared very close to your ears!
 You have lost the hair on your crown,
 you have taken off your gloves:
 950 I take it that you intend to sing the Hour of compline.' Bruun heard this and was not amused,
 for he could not at that moment take revenge.
 It seemed to him his heart would break
 955 and he plunged back into the river.
 He no longer wanted to hear the words of that vicious animal.
 He let himself float
 downriver on the current at once 960 and lay down on the sandy riverbank.
 How is Bruun to reach the court now?
 Nothing in the world would induce him to go on foot.
 He had been caught in the oak 965 so painfully – where earlier he had lost from his two paws
 all the nails as well as the skin –
 that he was at a loss
 how best to go to the king.
 970 Now hear how he undertakes the journey!
 He sat on his behind
 and began, feeling very ashamed,
 to move himself forward on his tail.
 And if, doing this, he became tired,

claws, so that once he has crawled out of the water, he can only move in unorthodox fashion, by sliding on his tail and rolling over and over from his back to his stomach. This is how he approaches the court, where some wonder what (not: who) it is that comes spinning down the road.

- 975 so wentelde hi dan eene wile.
Dus dreef hi meer dan eene mile

Binnen desen so was Brune ghenaeft

1009 tale ende wedertale: literally: 'tale and countertale', here: charge and defence.

975 he would roll for a while.
 He did this for more than a mile before reaching the king's court.
 When Bruun's approach
 in this manner was spotted from a distance, 980 some could not make out what it was that came rolling there.
 The king, who recognized Bruun at once, felt very sad at heart
 and said: 'This is my servant,
 985 Bruun; his head is so red that he must be mortally injured.
 Dear God, who has maltreated him so?'
 Meanwhile Bruun had come so near that he could complain to the king.
 990 He moaned and sighed loudly
 and said: 'King, noble lord,
 revenge me for the sake of your own honour on Reynaert, that vicious animal who, with his nasty trick, 995 has made me lose my fair cheeks
 and my ear to boot,
 and has made me as you see me.'
 The king said: 'May I be damned
 if I don't avenge this!'
 1000 And afterwards he called all the mightiest lords by name and ordered them all to attend his council and to advise him how this deed might best be dealt with by law 1005 in accordance with the king's honour.
 Then the highest in the land suggested that Reynaert should be summoned a second time,
 if the king agreed,
 so that both sides of the story might be heard.
 1010 They also said that they would like dat Tybeert die cater van desen tote Reynaerde bode soude wesen.

Al ware hi cranc, hi ware vroet.
Dese raet dinct den coninc goet.
1015 Doe sprac die coninc: 'Heere Tybeert,

'Ay heere,' sprac Tybeert, 'ic bem

Heere Brune, die staerc was ende fier,
ne conste Reynaert niet ghewinnen. [198vb]
1030 In welker wijs salics beghinnen?'
Doe sprac die coninc: 'Heere Tybeert,

Tybeert sprac: 'Nu helpe mi God
dat het mi moete wel vergaen.
1040 Ic sal eene vaert bestaen

God ghevere mi af al goet!'

1023-24 According to medieval legal procedures an accused had to be summoned three times before he could be sentenced in absentia. By staying away the accused showed that he had a bad conscience and wished to stay out of the clutches of the law.

Tybeert the cat to be the messenger to Reynaert.
Although he was weak, he was clever.
The king thought this good advice.

1015 Then the king said: 'Lord Tybeert,
on your way. Make sure, before you return,
that Reynaert comes with you.
Some of these lords say that, although Reynaert is hostile towards 1020 other animals, he trusts you so much that he will do as you tell him.
If he fails to appear, he will be the worse for it.
He will be summoned a third time,
to the disgrace of all his relatives.

1025 Go, Tybeert, tell him this.'
 'Please, lord,' Tybeert said, 'I am a poor creature, a small animal.
Lord Bruun, who was strong and brave
could not get the better of Reynaert.
1030 How am I to tackle this?'

 Then the king said: 'Lord Tybeert,
you are wise and experienced.
You may not be big, yet often many with cunning and discretion 1035 reach results
that with violence they would not.
Go, quickly do as I tell you.'
Tybeert said: 'Now may God help me,
that it will end well for me.

1040 I must undertake a journey that presses heavily on me.
God give that I may fare well!'

- Nu moet Tybeert doen die vaert, die zeere es drouve ende vervaert.
1045 Ende als hi up den wech quam,
sach hi van verren ende vernam
Sente Martins voghel, ende quam ghevloghen.
Doe wart Tybeert vroe ende in hoghen ende riep an: 'Sente Martins voghel, 1049 a keer herwaert dinen vlogel,
1050 nu vliech te miere rechter hant!'
Die voghel vloech daer hi vant
een haghe daer hi in wilde lijden
ende vloech Tybeert ter luchter zijden.
Dit teekin ende dit ghemoet
1055 dochte Tybeert niet wesen goet.
Hadde hi ghesien den voghel lijden

so waende hi hebben goet gheval.
Nu was hi dies onthopet al.
1060 Nochtan maecte hi hem selven moet

Dus liep hi henen sinen pas, tes hi quam te Manpertus

Tybeert sprac: 'God die rike

Die coninc dreecht hu an hu leven,

Reynaert sprac: 'Tybeert, helet vry, [199ra]

God gheve hu eere ende vrome.
Bi Gode, dat jan ic hu wale!'

1043-59 According to medieval superstition it was bad luck to be passed on one's left by a Saint Martin's bird. The frightened cat has, therefore, been warned. In the Middle Ages the left had negative connotations, a result of biblical influence. It is not known which bird is Second summons

- Now Tybeert has to undertake the journey,
feeling very anxious and fearful.
- 1045 And when he had started on his road,
he saw and noticed from a distance
a Saint Martin's bird, which came flying towards him.
This made Tybeert glad and cheerful and he called out: 'Saint Martin's bird,
- 1049 a wend your wing this way, 1050 now fly along my right hand side!'
The bird flew to where it found a bush into which it wished to go and flew along Tybeert's left hand side.
This omen and this encounter
- 1055 did not seem good news to Tybeert.
If he had seen the bird pass
him nicely on his right,
he would have imagined himself in luck.
Now he had lost all hope of success.
- 1060 Nevertheless he pulled himself together and pretended – as many do –
to be more confident than he felt.
And so he walked on at a steady pace
until he reached Manpertuus
- 1065 and found Reynaert at home,
standing there full of confidence.
Tybeert said: 'May the Almighty God
give you a good evening.
The king is threatening to take your life
if you do not come to court with me.'
- 1070 Reynaert said: 'Tybeert, noble hero, nephew, you are welcome here.
God give you honour and prosperity.
By God, that would I wish for you!'

meant by the Saint Martin's bird. Suggestions have ranged from a crow, a kite, a goose and a hen harrier. The bird was probably associated with impurity and deadly danger.

1079-80 These lines mean literally: 'before the line has been read to the end'. Possibly lijne suggests a string of prayer beads.

1081-1158 After the first summons the day has advanced. Tybeert already wishes Reynaert 'good evening' (goeden avont, 1068) and intends to return at once with the fox to the king's court. Reynaert, however, wishes to wait until the next morning and offers Tybeert hospitality, which means that a meal will have to be eaten. When Tybeert himself mentions the evening meal (1109-10), Reynaert answers that all he has in the house is honey, knowing that cats do not like honey.

1075 What does the smooth talking cost Reynaert?
Even though his tongue speaks fine words,
within his heart he is wicked.
This will become clear to Tybeert
before the story has been read 1080 to its conclusion. And then Reynaert said: 'Nephew, I want you to be my guest tonight,
and tomorrow, at light of day,
we will go to court without further ado.
1085 After all, among all my relatives
I have no one, Tybeert, in whom
I put more trust than I do in you.
Bruun the glutton came here.
He had such an aggressive attitude 1090 and I considered him so immensely strong that I would not for a thousand marks have walked along the way with him.
But I will with you, definitely,
tomorrow morning at dawn.'
1095 Tybeert said: 'It is more advisable and it seems better to me
if we went to court this evening than waiting until tomorrow.
The moon is shining on the heath
1100 as brightly as if it were day.
I think that no one could find a better time for our journey.'
'No, dear nephew,' Reynaert said,
'Those who, if met during the day, 1105 would address and greet us,
would most certainly not treat us well

By means of these clever manipulations Reynaert induces the cat to name his favourite food himself (fat mice). In turn, this provides an opening for suggesting that the guest's food should be procured elsewhere. Reynaert's proposition – in which the number of mice in the priest's barn is of a hyperbolic size (1123-26) – is met by Tybeert in equally exaggerated terms (1134-41, 1149-50, 1155-56). The fox increases Tybeert's excitement by pretending not to understand his enthusiasm (1121-22, 1131-32, 1142, 1147). On the structure of Reynaert's tricks, see also p. 20.

 'Eene vette muus,' sprac Reynaert,

 You must stay and be my guest tonight.'

- 1110 Tybeert said: 'What would we eat, Reynaert, if I stayed here?'
 'That is what worries me, dear nephew.
 Food is scarce here at the moment.
 You might, if you like,
 eat a piece of honeycomb, 1115 which is quite delicious.
 What do you say, you like honey perhaps?'
 Tybeert said: 'I don't care for it.
 Reynaert, don't you have anything else in your house?
 If you gave me a fat mouse, 1120 I would be content with that.'
 'A fat mouse,' Reynaert said,
 'sweet Tybeert, what are you saying?
 Now near here lives a priest;
 a barn is built against his house 1125 in which there are many fat mice.
 I believe they would not fit into a cart,
 so often do I hear the priest complain that they are driving him from house and home.'
 – 'Reynaert, are there really such fat mice there?' 1130 God give that I was there now.'
 'Tybeert,' he said, 'Is this true?
 Do you want mice?' – 'Do I want them?
 Reynaert, be silent about it.
 I love mice above anything.
 1135 Don't you know that mice taste better than any kind of game?
 If you are willing to do as I wish by leading me to the place where they are,
 you would be assured of my friendship, 1140 even if you were the murderer of my father and all my kin.'
- Reynaert said: 'Nephew, are you joking?'
 – 'Not me, Reynaert, so help me God.'
 – 'God is my witness, Tybeert: if I was sure of that 1145 you would eat your fill there even tonight.'

- ‘Sat, Reynaert? Dat ware vele!’
‘Tybeert, dat sechdi thuwen spele.’
‘In doe, Reynaert, bi miere wet.
Haddic een muus ende waer so vet,
1150 in gaefse niet omme eenen busant.’
‘Tybeert, gaet met mi tehant.
Ic leede hu daer ter selver stat
daer icker hu sal maken zat,

1155 ‘Ja ic, Reynaert, up die gheleede [199va]

‘So gaen wi dan. Wi sijn hier al te langhe,’ sprac Reynaert.
Doe so namen si up die vaert, 1160 Tybeert ende sijn oem Reynaert, ende liepen daer si loepen wilden
dat si nye toghel uphilden
eer si quamen tes papen scuere, die met eenen erdinen muere

1170 Hieromme was tornich ende gram

Dus gherne wrake hi den hane.
1175 Dit wiste Reynaert, dat felle dier,

Ne weset traghe no lat.

1156 In the Middle Ages Montpellier in the south of France was the place to study medicine. It was a widely known town, mentioned by Tybeert because it is far away.

1171 Martinet is the result of a forbidden relationship. He is the son of a priest, someone not allowed to enter into a sexual relationship with a woman (see also the note to 731). His

- ‘My fill, Reynaert? That would be nice!’
 – ‘Tybeert, you are only saying this in jest.’
 – ‘I am not, Reynaert, by my faith.
 If I had a mouse, and if it was fat,
 1150 I would not part with it for a piece of gold.’
 – ‘Tybeert, come with me straightaway.
 I shall lead you to this place where I shall make you get your fill before I ever leave your side again.’
 1155 – ‘Yes, Reynaert, with that assurance
 I would even go with you to Montpellier.’
 – ‘Well, then, let’s go. We have been here too long already,’ Reynaert said.
 Then they set out on their journey,
 1160 Tybeert and his uncle Reynaert,
 and ran where they wanted to run,
 with unbridled speed,
 until they reached the priest’s barn,
 which had been enclosed 1165 all round with an earthen wall, which Reynaert had broken into the day before
 when the priest had lost
 a cock, which the fox had taken from him.
 1170 For this reason the priest’s son Martinet was fuming and irate, and before the hole he had set a snare to catch the fox.
 So badly did he want to avenge the cock.
 1175 Reynaert, that evil animal, knew this,
 and said: ‘Nephew Tybeert,
 crawl through this hole here.
 Don’t dawdle or be slow.
 Grab everything about and around you.

name is reminiscent of the Saint Martin’s bird that gave a first indication of Tybeert’s impending misfortune (1047) brought about by the priest’s son. He is the one who discovers the cat in the snare, wakes the people in the house, and throws the stone that puts out Tybeert’s eye.

- 1190-99 Once arrived at the hole in the wall around the priest's barn, Tybeert hesitates despite his greedy appetite. The delay in the action serves to heighten the suspense: is Tybeert going to discover the danger that is in store for him after all? However, Reynaert overcomes Tybeert's suspicions by accusing him of cowardice. Ashamed of himself the cat jumps through the hole, and gets caught in the snare. The same procedure is used to an even more marked degree in the case of the deception of King Nobel (cf. 2200, 2514-17, 2623-35).

1180 Hear how the mice are squeaking!
 Come outside again when you've had enough.
 I shall stay by this hole
 and shall wait for you here outside.
 We must stay together tonight.
 1185 Tomorrow we will go to court.
 Tybeert, take care not to be slow.
 Go and eat and let us return
 to my hospitable dwelling, as is fitting.
 My wife will receive us gladly.'
 1190 – 'Should I go in through this hole?
 What do you say, Reynaert, is that your advice?
 Priests are cunning;
 I don't like to cross them.'
 – 'Oh dear, Tybeert, why are you such a coward?
 1195 What caused this change of heart?'
 Tybeert was ashamed of himself and jumped into a place where he experienced great misery, because, before he knew it, a snare
 was very tight around his neck.
 1200 In this way Reynaert deceived his guest!
 When Tybert became aware of the snare, he took fright and jumped forward. The snare pulled tight.
 Tybeert then had to scream
 1205 and betrayed himself by his distress.
 He uttered such loud screams and cried out so pitifully that Reynaert heard it in the street,
 outside, where he stood by himself,
 1210 and he shouted: 'Are the mice to your liking,
 Tybeert, and are they fat?
 If only Martinet knew

1200 By stating that Reynaert disgraces his guest, the narrator shows disapproval of the fox's behaviour. Reynaert violates the rules governing hospitality in order to get rid of Tybeert (cf. 1108, 1187-89).

1210-25 As was the case where it concerned Bruun, Reynaert rejoices in Tybeert's suffering when his scheme has worked. The sauce (1216) refers to the physical abuse at Martinet's hands (see note to lines 705-6).

Martinet hi was gheraect

Die pape spranc an dat vier 1245 ende ghegreep zijns wijfs rocke.
Een offerkeersse nam vrouwe Julocke

1236 The scandalous relationship in which the priest is engaged with Julocke has, as we find here, led to more children. This may well be mentioned to discredit the priest even more.

1245-49 In this scene Willem alludes to the motif of the mundus inversus, the world turned upside down. The priest and his wife each reach for objects (the distaff and the church candle) which are part of their partner's daily business: Julocke carries the heavy candle, and the priest that you were at table and eating this game in this way 1215 – how you can stomach it I don't know –

 he would make you a sauce with it.
 Such a well-mannered boy is Martinet!
 Tybeert, you are singing better all the time.
 Is that customary at the king's court?
 1220 If only it had pleased the almighty God that that criminal Ysingrijn
 had been with you, Tybeert, and as full of joy as you are!'

In this way Reynaert delights 1225 in Tybeert's mishap.
 And Tybeert stood screaming
 so loudly that Martinet woke up.
 Martinet shouted: 'Ha, ha, thank God!
 My snare was set at the right time:
 1230 it seems to me that I have caught the chicken thief with it.
 Let's go now and settle the score for the cock!'

At once he moved to the fire and quickly lit a wisp of straw, 1235 and woke his mother and father and all the children and shouted: 'Let's go, he's caught!'

Then all those who were in the house
 could be seen to shift themselves immediately.
 1240 The priest himself, not wishing to stay behind, left his bed as naked as the day he was born.
 Martinet had reached Tybeert and shouted: 'He is here!'

The priest jumped towards the fire 1245 and grabbed his wife's distaff.
 Lady Julocke took a church candle runs out wielding the distaff, an object strongly associated with femininity and, in the hands of a man, with a marked lack of masculinity. A little later Julocke says that she would have been quite prepared to give up the alms money of a whole year to have prevented the priest's injury, again assuming her husband's role (1272-75). The comic role reversal is concluded with the image of Julocke carrying her injured husband to his bed in her arms when, like a woman, he has fainted.

1260-69 As was the case during the first summons, it is the sensuality of the relationship between the priest and Julocke which enables the messenger to save himself. Because Tybeert, fearing for his life, jumps up into the priest's crutch and tears off a testicle, all members of the family stop maltreating the cat and concentrate on the priest. This enables Tybeert to and hastily lit it.

 The priest went towards Tybeert
 and started to hit him with the distaff.
 1250 Then Tybeert had to accept many blows in a short time.
 The priest stood, as all could see,
 completely naked and, blow upon blow,
 hit Tybeert lying before him.
 1255 Nobody spared themselves there.
 Martinet picked up a stone and threw it at Tybeert, which cost him an eye.
 The priest stood dressed only in his skin
 and raised his arms for a mighty blow.
 1260 When Tybeert realised that he was sure to die,
 he summoned the little courage he had,
 which led to dishonour for the priest.
 With both his claws and his teeth 1265 did he injure him, as was obvious, and jumped up between the priest's legs,
 at the purse that has no seam,
 with which the bells are rung.
 The thing fell down on to the floor.
 1270 The wife was distressed and swore by her father's soul that she would gladly have given the alms of an entire year for the priest not to have suffered 1275 this sorrow and this shame.
 She said: 'In the name of the hideous devil
 this snare must have been set!
 See, my dear Martinet,
 this was part of your father's tools.
 1280 See here my loss and my shame

tear the snare apart with his teeth and escape (1308-16).

1276-83 Julocke regrets the priest's loss, fearing he will become impotent and unable to satisfy her sexual needs. Once again the priest's forbidden relationship is highlighted.

1278 Julocke's use of the word neve expresses intimacy. See also 3075.

1288-97 Rey'naert's taunts are not limited to his victim Tybeert. Julocke, too, is comforted sarcastically by the fox on account of her lamentations. According to the fox her husband will for ever and a day.

Even if he recovers of his injuries,
he still won't be up to our sweet game.'

Reynaert was still standing before the hole.

1285 When he heard these words,
he laughed until his belly nearly burst
and a fart cracked from his backside.

Then he said, mockingly:

1290 'Be silent, Julocke, dear lady, and restrain these lamentations
and put a stop to your distress!
What does it matter that your lord has lost
one of his clappers?

The less he will need to exert himself!

1295 Be quiet about this.
If the priest recovers, it will be no dishonour that he rings with one bell!'
In this way Reynaert comforted Lady Julocke, who carried on very noisily.

1300 The priest could no longer stand; he fainted.

Then she lifted him up with a great effort
and carried him straight to bed.

1305 Meanwhile Reynaert returned to his dwelling alone, leaving Tybeert in great anguish
and mortal fear.

Even though Tybeert's worries were great,
when he saw that all were occupied 1310 with the priest who was lying there injured, he made such an effort that with his teeth
he bit the cord in two.

1315 Then he did not hesitate for a moment and jumped back out of the hole and took the straight road

be capable of performing satisfactorily in bed with just one testicle. In the course of the first summons Bruun was mocked twice.

1340-45 According to the medieval law of litigation Reynaert can be sentenced in absentia if that led to the king's court.

Before he arrived there, it was day and the sun began to rise.

1320 Pitiful and weak,
Tybeert came running into the court;
at the priest's house he had gained something he might long complain of.
When the king noticed 1325 that he had lost an eye, the king could be heard to threaten that criminal Reynaert fearfully.
The king then lost no time in summoning his barons to council 1330 and he asked what he might best do as regards Reynaert's offence.
Then many a proposal was made
how Reynaert, who had perpetrated this offence, should be made to see reason.

1335 Then Grimbeert the badger,
who was Reynaert's brother's son, said:
'My lords, you have given much advice.
Even if my uncle were twice as bad,
if the law for the free is to be maintained, 1340 he will have to be summoned three times,
as is done where it concerns a free man.
And if he fails to appear then,
he will be found guilty of everything of which he has been accused 1345 by these lords before the king.'
'Who, according to you, Grimbeert, should serve the summons?' said the king.
'Which of those present is willing to risk his eye or cheek 1350 for a fiendish creature?
I reckon that no one here is fool enough.'
Grimbeert said: 'So help me God!
Look at me here, I am so brave

he also fails to respond to the third summons without a lawful excuse. See the note to 1023-24.

1364-1406 Grimbeert’s announcement that ignoring this third summons will result in the storming of Manpertuus after three days and the death of Reynaert with his wife and children is in accordance with medieval law. Three days after the final summons has been served the breaker of the peace is declared an outlaw. The fox seems impressed by these arguments and states that he will follow Grimbeert to the king’s court (1399-1506). When, at the end of the story, Reynaert has fled with his family to a new wilderness (3140-65, 3317-29), the reader may wonder why he did not do this as soon as Grimbeert issued his summons. One explanation might be that that I dare take 1355 this message, if you tell me to.’

– ‘Grimbeert, be on your way and act cautiously and beware of mishaps.’
Grimbeert said: ‘Lord King, so I shall.’

Third summons

And so Grimbeert goes to Manpertuus.
1360 When he arrived there, he found his uncle and Lady Hermeline at home, lying with their cubs
in their den.
And as soon as Grimbeert could,
1365 he greeted his uncle and his aunt.
He said: ‘Are you not worried about your present uncertain legal position?
Don’t you think it time yet,
uncle Reynaert, to go 1370 on your way to the king’s court where serious accusations are made against you?
You have been summoned three times.
If you fail to appear tomorrow,
I fear that you will not find 1375 any mercy anymore.
On the third day you will find your castle Manpertuus stormed.
You will see in front of your house
a gallows or wheel erected.
1380 I assure you of this:
both your children and your wife

Reynaert goes to court to defend the interests of his clan (small predators), but that explanation does not fit the facts. After all, Reynaert’s lies and bad behaviour at court and later at Manpertuus result in himself and all his relatives being made outlaws. There is, of course, a narrative explanation: if Willem does not let the fox go to court, the story will reach an abrupt and untimely end. Moreover, it later becomes clear that Reynaert has sought the confrontation with the court deliberately, as may be deduced from his admission in 2042-49. It would seem that Reynaert had already decided to go to the king’s court before Grimbeert’s arrival, but does not tell him this.

Reynaert said: 'You are right.

Grimbeert andwoerde na desen:
‘Oem, wildi te biechten gaen,

1445 alle diefte ende allen roef,
of en diet hu niet een loef.’

1421 It is strange that Reynaert, having just said these words to his wife, suddenly addresses Grimbeert. Why does he abruptly thank the badger? It is likely that something went wrong at some stage in the textual history of the Comburg redaction. In the original work the fox will probably have continued speaking to Hermeline, as he does in other redactions.

1430-1691 The author uses the fox's confession to refer from the main story to existing beast narratives and side stories, thus creating a kind of collage. Here follows a survey of the sins Reynaert confesses: he deceived Bruun (1463-64) as well as Tybeert (1465-67), kidnapped and killed Canticleer's children (1468-72), sneered at the king and queen (1473-77), and tricked Ysingrijn the wolf on many occasions: about their family relationship (1482), as a monk at Elmare (1483-98), with a tonsure (1499-1503), on the ice (1504-7), with the priest of Bloys (1508-1605), at a trapdoor (1606-45), with his wife Haersint (1648-69). Within the reality of the narrative this confession serves two important functions. By making the fox refer to events that (are supposed to) have occurred at an earlier stage of the story or in well-known

Grimbeert, nephew, may God reward you.'

With courtly and with fine words
Reynaert took leave of his family and departed from his own residence.

1425 Oh, how sadly did Lady Hermeline and her little cubs stay behind, when Reynaert left Manpertuus, leaving home and estate entirely unprotected.

1430 Now hear what Reynaert did
as soon as he reached the heath!
He addressed Grimbeert and said:
'Grimbeert, look, dear nephew,
I sigh and tremble with anxiety.
1434a I am in fear of my life.
1434b My remorse concerning the sins
1434c that I have committed is so great.
1435 Dear nephew, I wish 1437 to confess them here to you:
there is no one else near here to act as priest.
Once I have made my confession, 1440 whatever may befall,
my soul will be that much cleaner.'

Grimbeert answered to this:
'Uncle, if you want to go to confession
you must abjure immediately 1445 all thieving and stealing, otherwise it will do you no good at all.'

beast narratives, the author provides his public with additional information. Partly on the basis of this confession, readers and listeners are thus able to see that Reynaert's claims later in the story are a pack of lies (1820-32, 2095-2105, 2706-16). At the same time the fox throws light on his character by the nature of his confession. Two 'sins' in particular are dwelled on at great length, with Reynaert rendering the dialogues between himself and the characters involved in direct speech (1508-1645). By recounting these adventures, which are at odds with the confession framework on account of their length and wealth of detail, the fox may well be suspected of glorying in his wicked ways.

1433-38 Reynaert claims to be in periculum mortis, in mortal fear of his life. That is a valid reason for making a confession. As there is no priest anywhere near, the fox wishes to confess his sins to the badger. This kind of lay confession was allowed in exceptional circumstances. As becomes clear from what follows, Reynaert lies when he says that he feels perfect contrition (contritio).

- 'Dat weet ic wel,' sprac Reynaert.
 'Grimbeert, nu hoert haerwaert

 Grimbeert sprac: 'Oem, walschedi?
 Of ghi yet wilt, spreect jeghen mi
 in Dietsche, dat ict mach verstaen.'
 1460 Doe sprac Reynaert: 'Ic hebbe mesdaen

1452-59 The standard formula to begin a confession is: 'Confiteor, pater, peccavi' ('I confess, father, for I have sinned'). Reynaert corrupts the Latin and continues in the vernacular. The badger holds the corrupt Latin for French. Both animals are treated ironically here.

'I am well aware of it,' Reynaert said.
 'Grimbeert, now listen carefully and advise me, please.
 1450 See, I come to you for absolution
 for all my offences.
 Listen, now, Grimbeert, and take note:
 Confiteor pater, mater,
 that I have wronged
 1455 the otter and the cat and every animal.
 Of that I desire to cleanse myself through confession.'
 Grimbeert said: 'Uncle, are you speaking French?
 If you please, speak to me
 in Dutch, so I can understand it.'
 1460 Then Reynaert said: 'I have misbehaved towards all living animals.
 Pray God that he may pardon me.
 I caused my uncle Bruun
 to end up with a very bloody crown.
 1465 I induced Tybeert to catch mice
 where I had him badly beaten,
 at the priest's house, where he jumped into the snare.
 I have caused Canticleer
 and his children much grief:
 1470 whether there were many or few,
 often I made away with them.
 He is right to accuse the fox for it.
 Nor did the king escape me.
 I caused him distress 1475 and the queen such great shame that it will be a long time before they get as much honour from me.
 Also I have – I am telling you,
 Grimbeert – cheated more persons
 1480 than I could tell you.

1473-77 After Reynaert has admitted his cruel treatment of Bruun, Tybeert and Canticleer, he confesses a heinous deed against Nobel and his wife. What event the fox is alluding to is not altogether clear. Perhaps Reynaert is thinking of his rape of the queen, described in branch Ia of the Roman de Renart. Cf. Martin 1882-1887, 1783-1800.

1481-82 The fact that Reynaert calls the wolf 'uncle' is a feature found in many branches of the Roman de Renart. The animals are supposed to be related and the wolf is considered to be superior in status to the fox. The fox addresses Ysingrijn in this way to win his confidence. Even though the wolf is deceived time and time again, he continues to believe in his pseudo-nephew's sincerity.

1483-98 It is likely that Willem put together the succinct story of the wolf who has joined a monastic order and, tied to the bell rope, rings the bells and is maltreated, from narrative elements found in various branches of the Roman de Renart. In a number of Old French narratives an animal is made a monk, and other tales refer to the ringing of the bells. It is only in branch VIII of the Roman de Renart that the two elements occur together: Ysingrijn is made a monk and is maltreated after having rung the bells. Cf. Martin 1882-1887, 119-134. On the monastery of Elmare, see the note to 373.

And Ysingrijn, understand me well,
 I called uncle for a deception.
 I made him a monk in Elmare which we had both entered.
 1485 That led to a painful time for him.
 I had him tie his two feet
 to the bell ropes.
 Ringing the bells he liked so much then that he was eager to practice it.
 1490 That caused him great shame,
 for he rang the bells so loudly that all who were walking outside in the street and all who were inside Elmare thought that it was the devil 1495 and ran to where they heard the bells ringing.
 Then, before he could quickly say
 "I want to enter the order",
 they had just about taken his life.
 Subsequently I gave him a tonsure.
 1500 He will remember it all his life,
 I am sure of that.
 I burned away his hair
 as a result of which his scalp shrivelled up.
 Later I caused him more disgrace
 1505 on the ice, where I taught him to fish
 in a place where he could not escape.
 There he received a severe hiding.
 At a later time I took him one day

1499-1503 Reynaert refers to an adventure told in branch III of the Roman de Renart (cf. Martin 1882-1887, 165-372). There the fox persuades the hungry wolf that he can have an abundance of delicious eels to eat if he decides to become a monk. When Ysingrijn declares that he wants to join the order, the fox gives him a tonsure by scalding him with boiling water, causing the skin to peel off his scalp.

1504-7 The story of the fishing expedition on the ice features in several branches of the Roman de Renart. In branch III the adventure immediately follows the tale of the tonsure (cf. Martin 1882-1887, 373-510). One winter the fox makes the wolf believe that he can catch fish by hanging his tail, with a bucket tied to its end, in a hole in the ice. The next morning the wolf finds his tail frozen fast in the ice. He is assaulted by a passing nobleman and his pack of dogs (cf. pp. 30-31).

village of Bloys consists of two parts. First the tale is told how the wolf, having entered the barn through a gap, gobbled up so much meat that he got stuck on trying to leave. Next Reynaert led the villagers to Ysingrijn by stealing the priest's cock. For the second story Willem may have made use of the Ysengrimus, in which, by stealing a cock, the fox leads a priest and the congregation to the wolf, who at that moment is stuck in the ice by his tail (cf. Mann 1987, book 1, 529, and book 2, 158). Just how false Reynaert's feelings of remorse are, is evident from

to the priest of Blois.
 1510 In the entire region of Vermendois
 there was not a richer priest.
 This particular priest had a larder
 where many sides of good bacon were stored.
 I often had a good taste of them.
 1515 Under the larder I had made a hole in a hidden place. Into that hole, that is where I made Ysengrijn crawl in.
 There he found beef in barrels
 and many sides of bacon hanging up.
 1520 He bolted down an enormous amount of meat.
 When he thought to return
 to safety back through the hole,
 his damn belly had become so big 1525 that he regretted what he had gained.
 The place he had entered hungry
 he could not leave now he was full.
 I ran away; I made a lot of noise
 in the village and made a great racket.
 1530 Now hear how I brought that about.
 I went to where the priest
 was at table, eating his dinner.
 The priest had a capon,
 it was the very best chicken 1535 to be found anywhere in the region.
 It was quite used to being hand fed.
 That one I grabbed with my mouth
 while it stood before the table,
 before the priest's eyes.
 1540 Then the priest shouted: "Quick, grab him, hit him!"

the obvious pleasure with which he describes the way the wolf is attacked.

1510 Vermendois is a county in Northern France that belonged for some time (1156-1186) to the county of Flanders. It has been suggested that the lant van Vermendoys is a concise reference to the area of Oostkerke, between Bruges and Sluis, where the abbey of St.-Quentin (located in the county of Vermendois) had certain possessions.

1527 What is meant here is that the wolf has got stuck.

1544 The priest invokes the Holy Spirit in corrupt Latin: ‘Sancta Spiritus’ instead of Help! Whoever saw a marvel like this?

 Even as I watch that fox comes in and robs me in my house.
 So help me Sancta Spiritus.
 1545 It will be the worse for him for coming here!"
 He grabbed the table knife and knocked against the table so that it flew high over my head and came down in the middle of the floor.
 1550 He swore heavily and raged and shouted loudly "Hit him!" and "Grab him!"
 And I was off and he after me.
 His table knife he held up high and he chased me 1555 to where Ysingrijn was standing.
 In my mouth I had the chicken which was very big and heavy.
 I had to leave it there,
 whether I wanted to or not.
 1560 Then the priest shouted: "There, sir thief,
 you have to leave your spoils behind here!"
 He shouted and I made off
 and went on my way.
 When the priest was about to pick up 1565 the chicken, he spotted Ysingrijn.
 Then great trouble was in store for him.
 The priest threw the knife, hitting him in the eye.
 Six men followed the priest,
 who all came carrying big clubs.
 1570 And when they saw Ysingrijn
 they made a lot of noise
 and the neighbours came out of their houses and told one another about the big news that there was caught 1575 in the priest's larder a wolf that had got itself trapped
 by its belly in the hole.

'Spiritus Sanctus', thus highlighting his virtual illiteracy.

1602 This is the waste land outside the village.

1606-45 The story of Ysingrijn's failed chicken theft from a house where the wolf falls off a roof beam as a result of Reynaert's machinations, is an adventure not found anywhere in the Roman de

When the neighbours heard that they came to see that marvel.
 1580 There Ysingrijn was beaten,
 so that it was no fun for him at all,
 for he received many hard blows there and big stones that were thrown at him.
 Then the children from the village came along 1585 and blindfolded him.
 He had little choice, he had to allow it.
 So violently did they beat and stab him
 that they managed to pull him out of the hole.
 Then he had to suffer a great deal of misery.
 1590 And they tied a stone to his neck and let him go and at once set the dogs on him,
 that barked at him and chased him.
 He was also treated to severe beatings 1595 for such a long time that he became exhausted.
 Then he fell down on the grass
 as if he were as dead as a stone.
 Then the children were overjoyed.
 There was much excitement all round.
 1600 They picked him up and laid him on a bier and carried him with much clamour across a stony and scrubby waste land.
 Outside the village in a ditch
 he lay all that night.
 1605 I don't know how he got away from there.
 Afterwards I managed to make him swear his friendship for an entire year.
 He did this on condition that I would stuff him with chickens.
 1610 Then I led him to a place where I told him
 that, in a large house along the road,
 two hens and a cock

Renart. Willem probably composed this story, basing himself on traditional story elements like the nocturnal break-in and the entrapped burglar betraying his presence by the noise he makes.

1607 sine hulde refers to Ysingrijn's loyalty as a vassal.

1648-69 Reynaert had sexual intercourse with the she-wolf twice: the first time she committed adultery, the second time he raped her (see note to 72-77). The fox's confession concerns the adultery, which, as he states in cryptic terms (1654-55), he would like to repeat

were sitting on a roof beam 1615 right next to a trapdoor.
 There I made Ysingrijn climb with me
 up to the top of that house.
 I said that I assured him that if he would crawl in through the trapdoor, 1620 he would find just inside
 as many fat hens as he liked.
 Laughing he went to the trapdoor and carefully crawled through and began to grope around here and there.
 1625 He groped around and when he did not find anything
 he said: "Nephew, I fear there is something wrong, I can find nothing here."
 I said: "Uncle, what's up with you?
 Crawl a little further in!
 1630 One needs to take trouble to succeed.
 I have taken away the ones sitting at the front."
 In this way he let himself be fooled
 and looked for the chickens too far off.
 I saw that I could play a nasty trick on him 1635 and pushed him so that he fell from up there on to the floor and his fall was so loud that everyone woke up
 who was asleep in the house.
 1640 Those who were lying by the fire shouted that something in the house, they did not know what,
 had dropped in front of the fireplace.
 They got up and made light.
 When they next saw him there,
 1645 he was given mortal injuries.
 I have brought great trouble on him,
 more than I can say.
 But all the things that I ever perpetrated

some time. This makes it clear once again that Reynaert's confession is insincere. The badger reacts like a serious confessor, not as someone secretly enjoying the story in all its details. His serious attitude is evident from his admonitions in 1678-87.

- jeghen hem, so ne roucke ic niet

Grimbeert sprac: ‘Of ghi wilt gaen

1660 In weet waerwaert ghi dit trect:
“Ic hebbe jeghen sijn wijf mesdaen.”
Oem, dat en can ic niet verstaen,

Reynaert sprac: ‘Neve Grimbeert,

1654-55 Reynaert’s comment is ambiguous. He seems to be saying that he did something to the she-wolf that he would sooner not have done, but his words can also be taken to mean that he would prefer still having to do what he is referring to, rather than having already accomplished it.

1650 against him I do not regret so much as the fact that I betrayed him with Lady Haersint, his beautiful wife, whom he loved more than his own life.
 May God forgive me!
 With her I did something I like having to do better 1655 than having done it.'

Grimbeert said: 'If you want to confess sincerely to me
 and be free from your sins,
 you must speak openly.
 1660 I do not know what you mean with:
 "I have behaved badly towards his wife".
 Uncle, I do not understand what you mean with these words.'
 Reynaert said: 'Nephew Grimbeert, 1665 would it be very civilised
 if I had bluntly said:
 "I have slept with my aunt"?
 You are my relative, it would disturb you
 if I used a coarse expression.

1670 Grimbeert, now I have told you all that I can remember at present.
 Give me absolution, I pray you,
 and set me the penance that you think fitting.'

Grimbeert was wise and sensible 1675 and broke a twig off a bush and gave Reynaert forty stripes with it for all his transgressions.
 Afterwards he urgently advised him to be good 1680 and to wake and to pray and to fast and to attend and to point the right way to all those he would see stray

1675-76 The forty stripes or blows which the fox has had administered by Grimbeert are in accordance with ecclesiastical usage, based on the Bible (Deut. 25, 3 and 2 Cor. 11, 24).

1681 te vierne means to observe holy days.

- ende hi voert alle sine daghe

1694-1748 Reynaert attempts to steal one of the convent's chickens but is stopped just in time by Grimbeert, who reprimands him severely. The narrator leaves no doubt about Reynaert's evil intentions (1700-7). The fox strays from the straight and narrow

- and for the rest of his days
 1685 to make an honest living.
 After this he made him abjure
 both robbing and stealing.
 Now Reynaert has to look after his soul
 following Grimbeert's advice, 1690 and he went to court in the hope of mercy.
 Now the confession is over.
 The two lords went on their way to the king's court.
 Now beside the straight road 1695 they had started out on,
 there was a priory of black nuns
 where many a goose and many chickens,
 many a hen, many capons
 used to range for food outside the walls.
 1700 The scoundrel knew this,
 that devious Reynaert,
 and said: 'Towards that court
 the straight road leads us.'
 With this deception 1705 he led Grimbeert to the barn,
 where, outside the walls, the hens were pecking here and there.
 Reynaert noticed the hens.
 His eyes began to rove around.
 1710 At a distance from the others walked a cockerel that was very fat and young.
 Reynaert leapt in its direction,
 scattering the cockerel's feathers.
 Grimbeert said: 'Uncle, I think you're mad!
 1715 Misguided man, what are you doing?
 Do you want for the sake of a chicken to lapse into all the great sins which you have just confessed?

immediately after his confession (cf. 1694, 1747 and p. 23-24) and is clearly, therefore, a hypocrite.

1702 hove refers to the convent's garden.

- Dat moet hu wel zeere rauwen!’ 1720 Reynaert sprac: ‘Bi rechter trauwen, ic hads vergheten, lieve neve.
Bidt Gode dat hijt mi vergheve.
Het ne ghesciet mi nemmermeer.’
Doe daden si eenen wederkeer 1725 over eene smale brugghe.
Hoe dicken sach Reynaert achter rugghe
weder daer die hoenre ghinghen!
Hi ne conste hem niet bedwinghen,
hi ne moeste ziere zeden plegghen.
1730 Al hadde men hem thoeft afgheslegghen,

also verre alst hadde ghemogghen.
Grimbeert sach dit ghelaet
ende seide: ‘Onreyne vraet, 1735 dat hu dat hoghe so ommegaet!’
Reynaert andwoerde: ‘Ghi doet quaet
dat ghi mine herte so verseert
ende mine bede dus verstorbeert.
Laet mi doch lesen II paternoster 1740 der hoenre zielen van den cloester
ende den gansen te ghenaden,
die ic dicken hebbe verraden,
die ic desen helegghen nonnen met miere lust af hebbe ghewonnen.’
1745 Grimbeert balch, newaer Reynaert [203ra]

1750 Daer keerde si te hove waert 1749 ende arde zeere beefde Reynaert, doe hi began den hove naken,
daer hi waende seere mesraken.

1744 lust is ambiguous, meaning both clever trick and physical desire.

- That you will regret dearly!’
1720 Reynaert said: ‘In all truth,
I had forgotten it, dear nephew.
Pray God he may forgive it me.
It shall never happen again.’
Then they turned back 1725 across a narrow bridge.
How often did Reynaert look back to where the chickens were!
He could not restrain himself,
he had to follow his instincts.
1730 Even if they had knocked off his head,
it would have flown to the hens,
as far as it possibly could.
Grimbeert noticed this behaviour
and said: ‘Filthy glutton, 1735 for having such a roving eye!’
Reynaert answered: ‘You are doing wrong
by hurting my feelings so and by disturbing my prayer.
Allow me to recite two pater nosters 1740 for the salvation of the souls of the convent’s hens and geese,
which I have frequently attacked and which I have often caught by tricking these pious nuns.’ 1745 Grimbeert was angry, but Reynaert kept looking back,
until they arrived at the straight road
that they earlier had left.
1750 There they turned towards the court
1749 and Reynaert trembled very much when he approached the court
where, he feared, he would fare very badly.

1773-95 Reynaert pretends to be one of the king's loyal vassals. The adoption of this stance is connected with the trick which he later uses to deceive Nobel. In the same way as Bruun and Ysin-

Conviction and reconciliation

When it became known at the king's court that Reynaert had arrived at court 1755 with Grimbeert the badger,
 I reckon there was no one
 – however poor or of inferior family – who did not prepare himself for a complaint.
 All this was aimed at Reynaert.
 1760 Nevertheless he acted as if he had nothing to fear, whatever his real feelings,
 and he said to Grimbeert the badger:
 'Lead us along the high street.'
 Reynaert presented an attitude 1765 and such bold behaviour that it looked as if he were the king's son and had done nothing wrong at all.
 Boldly he took up his position
 in front of Nobel the king 1770 and said: 'God who has created everything, may he give you, Lord King, enduring joy and honour!
 I greet you, king, as is only right.
 Never did a king have a servant
 1775 as loyal towards him
 as I am and have ever been.
 This has often become clear.
 Yet some of those who are here
 would with pleasure rob me 1780 of your favour, if you were willing to believe them.
 But no, not you. God reward you!
 It is not fitting for crowned heads to put credence too lightly
 in tales told by false counsellors and villains.
 1785 Yet I wish to complain of this to God:
 there are in this day and age too many plotters

grijn are deluded by promises of honey and mice, the fox will make Nobel believe that he has escaped a conspiracy and that it is Reynaert, his most devoted servant, whom he has to thank for it.

- 1820 ‘Nomine patrum, christum filye!’
 sprac Reynaert, ‘of mijn heere Brune

1820 After Nobel’s furious reaction Reynaert begins his answer with a garbled formula used when making the sign of the cross (here to ward off approaching evil): In nomine Patris, capable of making false accusations who now have gained the upper hand everywhere at powerful courts.

 1790 They should not be believed.
 Villainy is their nature;
 as a result they cause all good people distress.
 May God revenge it upon their lives and may He give them in eternity 1795 such reward as they deserve!’

The king said: ‘Woe upon you, Reynaert!
 Woe, Reynaert, foul piece of evil,
 what a fine front you put on!
 That will not help you one bit now.
 1800 Stop your flattery now.
 Flattery won’t make me your friend.
 The truth is that you should have served me concerning a certain affair in the wood, whereas you did not keep 1805 to the peace that I had proclaimed.’
 – ‘Alas, to think of all I have lost!’
 said Cantecleer, who was standing there.

The king said: ‘Hold your tongue,
 Lord Cantecleer, now let me speak;
 1810 let me respond to his nasty tricks.
 Well, Lord villain Reynaert, that you love and respect me,
 this you have shown without much trouble
 to my messengers:
 1815 poor Tybeert and Lord Bruun
 whose crown is still covered in blood!
 I shall not find fault about it with you;
 I suspect that your throat will suffer for it even today, before long.’

1820 ‘Nomine patrum, christum flye!’
 Reynaert said, ‘If my Lord Bruun’s crown is still bloody all over,

et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti (‘in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost’). The fox’s words mean something like ‘in the name of the Fathers and Christ the Son’.

1845 Reynaert means that if he were to be executed, this would be retribution unworthy of a mighty king.

1846-85 Having listed the plaintiffs who have the fox taken prisoner in the king's presence (1846-67), the narrator summarizes the account of Reynaert's trial and conviction

- 1822a Lord King, what's that to me?
 1822b Even if he did eat Lamfroyt's honey
 1822c and even if those peasants did beat him up, 1822d surely Bruun is big and strong enough.
 When he was beaten or ridiculed,
 he should, had he been brave, have revenged himself 1825 before finally escaping into the water.
 And then: that Tybeert the cat,
 whom I received hospitably,
 went out stealing
 at the priest's house against my advice 1830 and was badly treated by the priest,
 by God! am I to suffer for it?
 Then I can really say goodbye to my luck!
 Reynaert continued: 'King Lion, who doubts that you can do 1835 whatever you command with me?
 However strong my case,
 you can make or break me.
 Whether you want to boil or roast or hang or blind me, 1840 I cannot escape you.
 All animals are in your power.
 You are mighty and I am weak.
 I get little support and you get much.
 By God, if you put me to death,
 1845 that would be a poor revenge.'
 Just as this was being said
 Belin the ram jumped up and his ewe that accompanied him;
 that was Lady Hawy.
 1850 Belin said: 'Let all of us present our charges.'
 Bruun jumped up with his relatives and nasty Tybeert

in a few lines (1868-85, and see pp. 24-25). This summary will be followed by an extensive description of Reynaert's escape from execution, which numbers more than four hundred lines (2052-2490). In this way the emphasis is on the lies with which the fox will gain Nobel's favour.

 1885 Nu gaet Reynaerde al hutten spele!
 Doe Reynaert verordeelt was,

1886-1914 Grimbeert leaves the court with Reynaert's relatives; they disagree with the verdict of the death sentence (1886-93). If a conflict with this group were to arise, this would certainly undermine Nobel's position, as he is dependent on his vassals. However, a death sentence has been pronounced that cannot easily be ignored by Nobel, who, although he and Ysingrijn his companion, 1855 Fortadent the boar

 and Tiecelin the raven, Pancer the beaver, as well as Bruneel,
 the bittern, that shapeless bag,
 and the squirrel, Lord Rosseel, 1860 the weasel, my Lady Fine,
 – Cantecleer and his children wildly flapped their wings –,
 the ferret Cleenebejach,
 they all joined the crowd.
 1865 All of them took up their positions before their lord the king and had Reynaert taken prisoner.
 Now the pleading started there.
 Never did anyone hear animals
 1870 utter such eloquent words as they did here in the case between Reynaert and the other animals, 1871 a as witnessed by those who heard it!
 1871 b If I had to report the speeches and the words that were presented there,
 it would be difficult and troublesome for me.
 That is why I shall shorten the tale for you.
 1875 The best arguments were brought forward there.
 The charges that the animals presented were supported by reliable witnesses,
 as was expected of them.
 The king urged the mighty barons 1880 to pronounce the verdict in Reynaert's case.
 Then they passed as their judgement that a gallows should be made, strong and solid,
 and that Reynaert, that felonious fellow,
 was to be hanged from it by his throat.
 1885 Now the game is up for Reynaert!
 When Reynaert had been sentenced, administers justice and presides over the court of law, can pass no judgement: he is bound to pass sentence as his vassals wijzen, 'advise' (165-69). Facing this dilemma, the king – called arde vroet, 'very perceptive' (1894) – makes a veiled attempt at postponing the execution. In a pseudo-reproachful tone he addresses the executioners Ysingrijn and Bruun thus: 'how slow

 Ende mettien woerde versuchte hi.

you are (1903-4); surely you can see it is nearly evening and Reynaert is so familiar with the terrain that he would not be caught for a considerable time if he escaped (1905-11); if Reynaert is to hang, why don't you get on with it; it is now too late to hang him' (1913-14). The time of day is important as death sentences had to be executed before sun down. Nobel's indirect way of addressing the executioners is a tactical move according to this interpretation. For the first time in the story the king's interests and the interests of the barons do not

Grimbeert the badger took his leave with Reynaert's next of kin:
 they could neither bear to see 1890 nor could they accept that Reynaert should before their eyes
 be hanged like a thief.
 Yet some it suited very well.
 The king now, he was very perceptive.
 1895 When he noticed and realized that many a youngster who was closely related to Reynaert left the court with Grimbeert,
 he thought to himself:
 1900 'Here something else needs to be considered.
 Even if Reynaert himself is wicked,
 he has many a good relative.'
 Then he said: 'Why do you dawdle,
 Ysingrijn and Lord Bruun?
 1905 Reynaert is familiar with many hedgerows
 and it is nearly evening.
 Here we have Reynaert; if he escapes,
 if he manages to get three feet of freedom,
 his cunning is so great 1910 and he knows so many byways that he will never be caught in a year.
 If he is to hang, why is it not done?
 Before a gallows can be got ready now, it will be night.' 1915 Ysingrijn had a thought and said: 'There is a gallows near here.'
 And with these words he sighed.
 Then the cat, Lord Tybeert, spoke:
 'Lord Ysingrijn, your heart

run completely parallel (see p. 25).

1905 The king means that Reynaert is acquainted with numerous hedgerows in which to hide.

1906 The second day, which started with Tybeert's return to court (cf. 1318-19) was spent delivering the third summons and with Reynart's trial and death sentence at court. Now it is nearly evening.

Ysingrijn sprac tote Tybeert:
‘Wat ghi ons algader leert!

Reynaerd, die langhe hadde gheswegghen,

1923-27 At Reynaert’s instigation two of the wolf’s brothers have in the past been hanged. A story of this kind is not found in the Roman de Renart. It is not clear whether Willem is alluding to a story not known today, or whether he invented the hanging.

1929 Ysingrijn means that Tybeert is talking nonsense.

1943 The intimation of friendly intimacy, neve, contrasts sharply with the characterization of Reynaert as a scoundrel.

1944 In redactions other than Comburg it is not the king but Reynaert who tells Tybeert

- 1920 is troubled, I shall not hold it against you.
 Yet it was Reynaert who had thought it all out and went along himself to where they hanged your two brothers, Rumen and Wijdelancken.
- 1925 It's time that you thank him for it.
 If you were strong, it would be over by now,
 he would no longer be alive.'
 Ysingrijn said to Tybeert:
 'What would we do without your advice!
- 1930 If we weren't short of a noose,
 his throat would long ago have known what his behind weighs.'
- Reynaert, who had long been silent,
 said: 'You lords, shorten my anguish.
- 1935 Tybeert has a strong rope around his throat, which he acquired where he had much to endure
 in the house where he bit the priest who stood before him without any clothes.
- 1940 Lord Ysingrijn, make haste now;
 after all you have been appointed,
 and you, Bruun, that you should kill Reynaert, your nephew, the red scoundrel!'
 Then the king spoke at once:
- 1945 'Let Tybeert go along.
 He can climb. He can take the rope to the top without the difficulty it would cause you.
 Tybeert, hurry and get it ready.
 It pains me to see you so slow.'
- 1950 Then Ysingrijn said to Bruun:
 'May the tonsure to accompany Bruun and Ysingrijn. The wolf's late and inadequate reaction (1953-54) suggests that the redaction in which the fox is the sole speaker is probably closer to the original. It is also primarily in Reynaert's interest that the cat – whom he will accuse a little later – leaves the scene.

1951-52 The wolf swears on his tonsure. This is reminiscent of one of his earlier mishaps. Reynaert scalded his scalp with boiling water, thus making the skin come off (see note to 1499-1503).

 sprac Tybeert ende nam de lijne.

1955 By way of revenge for his tonsure, Ysingrijn suggests brewing monastic beer, a metaphor indicating the preparation of physical abuse (Reynaert will be hanged). In 2173-78 the narrator returns to the brewing metaphor. In 2801 the raven calls Reynaert master butler. Cf. also the note to 705-06.

1977-92 Ysingrijn is described in ironic terms here. By using ambiguous phrases, he inadvertently gives the impression of conducting a marriage between his wife and the fox: he asks her on top of my head help me;

 I never heard such good advice
 as Reynaert gives here himself.
 1955 He has a fancy for the monks' beer.
 Let us hurry now and brew it for him!
 Bruun said: 'Nephew Tybeert, take the rope. You shall come along.
 Reynaert will now pay 1960 for my fine cheeks and your eye.
 Let's go and hang him so high that all his friends will be disgraced.'
 'Let's go, he has certainly deserved it,'
 Tybeert said, and took the rope.
 1965 Never did he exert himself with more pleasure.
 Now the three lords,
 1966a who hated Reynaert intensely, were ready.
 These were the wolf and Tybeert and Lord Bruun, who had learned to his cost to steal honey.
 1970 Ysingrijn was so determined that, before leaving the court, he insisted on urging that his nieces and nephews and all those who remained at court 1975 – both acquaintances and strangers – should keep Reynaert prisoner.
 Lady Haersint, his wife,
 he ordered on her life
 to stand at Reynaert's side 1980 and to take him by his beard and never to part from him,
 not for goods and not for riches,
 not for better and not for worse,

to stay with Reynaert for better and for worse until death will part them (1981-84). Reynaert realizes this and continues the ambiguity by hinting that he did not rape the she-wolf, but that she committed adultery. For that reason he does not need to ask forgiveness from her; asking her husband's forgiveness suffices. That is why Reynaert asks for half ghenade, 'half mercy' (1987).

1978 bi haren live is ambiguous, meaning 'on her life' or 'with her lover', in other words: Reynaert. Cf. 236, 1988.

- no dor zorghe van der doot.
 1985 Reynaert andwoerde in corten woorden,

1988 This line is ambiguous. Reynaert appears to be saying 'even if you love my downfall', but nor even for fear of death.

 1985 Reynaert answered quickly with words that all assembled there heard:
 'Lord Ysingrijn, have half mercy on me!
 Even if you love my downfall
 and even though you lead me into trouble, 1990 I know for certain that, if my aunt were to remember past actions in all honesty,
 she would never harm me.
 Really, Lord Ysingrijn, dear uncle,
 you take bad care of your nephew, 1995 as do Lord Bruun and Lord Tybeert,
 for having disgraced me so!
 You three, you are completely responsible for it that they shall kill me.
 Moreover, you have ensured 2000 that anyone who approaches me abuses me for a thief or hates me.
 For that reason, God is my witness,
 may all three of you be dishonoured
 if you don't make haste 2005 to do all that you plan.
 My heart knows no fear at all;
 I have to die at some time.
 Was not my father, when he died,
 free of all sins?
 2010 Go, prepare the gallows! Either you don't delay one moment longer, or you may go to hell
 as fast as your feet and legs can carry you.'
 Then Ysingrijn said: 'Amen.'
 2015 'Amen,' Bruun said, 'and may he go to hell who delays any longer.'
 Tybeert said: 'Let's hurry now.'
 And with these words they jumped up and ran away with great joy 2020 and competed with one another

it is also possible that he says 'even if your beloved (i.e. Haersint) was my downfall'. Cf. 236, 1978.

2039-49 Reynaert's monologue informs the tale's audience of his intentions. His devious plan requires that his three adversaries leave the court. The plan he has concocted is targeted at the king. The indications of time suggest that his plan took shape during the night that ended so badly for Tybeert, that is, even before Grimbeert's arrival.

in jumping over many a hedgerow,
 Ysingrijn and Lord Bruun.
 Tybeert followed them at a distance;
 he found walking somewhat heavy going 2025 because of the rope he carried.
 Nevertheless he was quick enough;
 that was because he was in such a good mood.

Reynaert stood there and was silent
 as he watched his enemies walk away 2030 who thought to put the noose round him.
 'But that will not happen,' said Reynaert,
 who stands and watches them
 as they jump this way and that.

He thought: 'Deus, what silly youngsters!
 2035 Let them jump and run now.
 If I survive, they will pay for their arrogance and their abuse,
 if my foxy tricks don't fail me.

Nevertheless I prefer to see 2040 in the distance, rather than close by, those that I feared most.

Now I want to try to
 to present the court with a plan that I thought up before dawn 2045 in great anguish in the night.
 If my ruse works as well as I hope it will,
 then, however clever and quick-witted he is,
 I expect to be able to deceive the king.'

2050 The king gave orders for a horn to be blown and had Reynaert led out.

Reynaert said: 'First let be prepared the gallows on which I shall hang.
 And meanwhile I shall 2055 publicly make my confession

2051 huutwaer leeden means 'lead out, forth', i.e. from the court to the gallows.

2054-60 Reynaert announces a public confession to ensure forgiveness for his sins, which is also meant to avoid that other animals are accused falsely of his crimes after his death. Nobel cannot refuse his prisoner this. The way is now clear for Reynaert's fabrications.

2090 Doe mi bloedich wert mijn tant,

2065 Dominus: the Lord God.

2070-76 Reynaert explains how he came to live a life of sin. The fact that Reynaert as a ‘child’ played with lambs, is reminiscent of the vision of the future as described in the Bible so that my sins may be forgiven.

 It is better that all here present should hear of my thieving and my crimes than that they should later charge another 2060 with my misdeeds.'
 The king said: 'Well then, speak.'
 Reynaert stood there, a picture of misery,
 and looked all around him.
 Then he spoke, clearly audible:
 2065 'Help me,' said he, 'Dominus!
 Now there is no one here in this place, neither friend nor foe, whom I have not wronged in one way or another.
 Nevertheless listen all of you, my lords.
 2070 Let it become clear to you how I, Reynaert, poor creature,
 first began my wicked ways.
 At all times, night and day,
 I was a well-behaved child.
 2075 When I was weaned from the breast
 I went to play with the lambs
 so as to hear them bleat,
 until I bit one to death.
 For the first time I lapped up the blood.
 2080 It tasted so good, it was so nice that I also tried the flesh.
 That taught me to appreciate good food
 so much that I went to the goats
 in the woods where I heard them bleating.
 2085 There I bit to death two kids.
 This I also did on the third day and I became ever bolder and braver and killed ducks and chickens and geese wherever I came across them.
 2090 When I had developed a taste for blood in the Book of Isaiah (11, 6-7). On the arrival of the Messiah, the peace of paradise will be restored, and the wolf will lie with the lamb (see pp. 26-27).

2095-99 While under Ysingrijn's influence – who calculated that they were related – Reynaert is supposed to have been persuaded to join the wolf as 'partners in crime'. The fox gives a skewed presentation of the facts. As his earlier confession and other stories show, it was the fox who made the wolf believe that they were related. See note to 1481-82.

2104-38 Earlier, in the distorted tale of the theft of the fish (cf. note to 208-16) and his version of the theft of the side of bacon (see note to 217-29), Grimbeert stressed the wolf's gluttony.

I became so fierce and cruel that I bit to death everything
 I met and that I thought would agree with me and that I could handle.
 2095 Next I met Ysingrijn
 one winter during a cold spell near Belsele under a tree.
 He calculated that he was my uncle
 and began to point out our kinship.
 2100 That is where we became partners.
 I have every reason to regret it!
 There we swore on our word of honour
 loyal friendship to one another.
 Next we began to roam around together.
 2105 He stole the big ones and I the little ones.
 All that we caught was common property.
 But when we came to share,
 I was very pleased indeed
 if I received half of my share.
 2110 When Ysingrijn caught a calf,
 or a wether or a ram,
 he would growl and become ferocious and I would be shown such disagreeable and mean behaviour 2115 that he scared me off with it and that my share fell to him altogether.
 However, that did not bother me.
 So many times I found,
 when we had been lying in wait for a large prey 2120 that my uncle and I then caught,
 an ox or a pig,
 that he would sit down at his ease
 with his wife Lady Haersint

Reynaert continues along these lines. In the same way that Grimbeert earlier said that the fox was only given the fish bones and the string from the side of bacon as his share, Reynaert now says that he had to be satisfied with a rib that had been gnawed bare by the wolf's cubs. However, although Reynaert did not get his proper share of the loot, this did not really matter as he is very fond of his uncle and anyway, he is exceedingly rich Slowly but surely the clever fox has worked round to the introduction of the treasure (2134-38).

2139-63 The treasure – the size of which is sketched by Reynart in superlatives (2137-38) – appears to have been stolen and to be at the same the financial means of funding a conspiracy to murder King Nobel. This arouses reactions from the royal couple. Nobel shows and his seven children.

 2125 Then I would be allowed at most one of the tiniest ribs
 that his children had gnawed bare.
 This is how little it yielded me.
 And yet I did not really mind it.
 2130 If I had not felt so much affection for my uncle,
 – who hardly cares for me –
 I could have had enough to eat.
 King, this I want you to know:
 2135 I still have silver and gold that is entirely at my disposal in such great quantities that a cart going seven times round would barely be able to transport it.’
 When the king heard this,
 2140 he gave Reynaert a sharp answer:
 ‘Reynaert, how did you come by this treasure?’
 Reynaert answered: ‘I’ll tell you about it.
 If you wish to know what I know,
 neither for love nor for hate 2145 shall it remain hidden.
 King, that treasure was stolen.
 But if it had not been stolen,
 it would have been used for the murderous attack on your life, on my word of honour, 2150 that would greatly grieve all your friends.’
 The queen became upset
 and said: ‘Alas, my dear Reynaert!
 Alas, Reynaert, alas, alas!
 Alas, Reynaert, what are you saying?
 2155 I urge you, by nothing less than the journey that your soul will undertake,
 that you tell us this instant, Reynaert,
 the whole truth
 publicly, and inform us

an interest in the treasure. The queen fears for her husband’s life; anxiously she encourages Reynaert to speak freely.

2144 The phrase means ‘for nothing in the world’.

2180-2208 Reynaert answers the queen that he wiſhes to ſpeak freely about the murder plot

2160 if you know of any attempt at murder or of a plan with intent to murder that concerns my husband.
 Let us hear it here in this assembly.
 Now hear how Reynaert will delude 2165 the king and queen and how, in an ingenious way,
 he will gain the king's friendship and favour,
 and how he, through no fault of their own,
 will cause Bruun and Ysingrijn both 2170 great difficulties and how he will create hardship for them
 and a feud with the king!
 These lords, they were now very proud because they thought to have brewed 2175 Reynaert some beer to his disgrace.
 However, I truly believe that he in his turn will brew them mead that they will drink to their shame!
 With a face expressing sadness
 2180 Reynaert said: 'Noble queen,
 even if you had not pressed me at this moment,
 I am one who expects to die.
 I do not want to burden my soul with it.
 And if I did so accidentally,
 2185 hell would await me for it where there is torment and pain!
 If the noble king
 would cause it to be quiet,
 I would, with his permission, relate 2190 how dreadfully he was betrayed
 by his subjects with a plan for his murder.
 Yet the worst conspirators are some of my dearest relatives,

even though a number of his own relatives are implicated. He states that he accuses them only for fear of going to hell. King Nobel is touched by this but still hesitates. He seeks confirmation and asks Reynaert sechstu mi waer? ('are you telling the truth?' 2200), using the familiar form of address (see also note to 547-622). Reynaert stresses that he speaks the truth; after all, he is about to die (mine langhe vaert, 'my long journey', 2207) and has to be mindful of the salvation of his soul.

 'Waer?' sprac Reynaert, 'vraechdi mi des?
 Ja ne weet ghi wel hoet met mi es?
 Ne bewaent niet, edel coninc,
 al bem ic een aermijnc,
 2205 hoe mochtic sulke moert ghetemen?
 Waendi dat ic wille nemen

 Bi der coninghinnen rade,

 2220 Hi sprac: 'Nu zwichet overal,

 Ic sal hu lesen sonder brief

 sodat ic niemene en spare 2225 dien ic te wroughene sculdich bem.
 Dies lachter hevet, scaems hem!'
 Nu verneemt allegader

2197 Hier: that is, on earth.

2211 The king raises his voice as he is speaking in an official capacity.

2222 lesen sonder brief means to recite by heart and accurately.

2227-38 The narrator's comments ensure that the audience is informed of Reynaert's plan to accuse his father and Grimbeert of treason. Precisely by assigning complicity to his own relatives in

2195 whom I would in no way accuse
 if it was not for the fear of hell,
 where – it is said – all those suffer who die here and know of a murder and do not reveal it.’
 The king’s heart sank
 2200 and he said: ‘Reynaert, are you telling me the truth?’
 ‘The truth?’ said Reynaert, ‘are you asking me that?
 Surely you know how it is with me?
 Don’t you wonder, noble king,
 how even a poor creature like me
 2205 could bear such an outrage?
 Do you think I would want to burden myself with a lie on my long journey?
 Truly, not me!’ Reynaert said.
 On the advice of the queen,
 2210 who feared that the king should come to harm,
 the king loudly proclaimed that no one should be so bold
 as to utter so much as a single word
 until Reynaert had been able at his leisure 2215 to have his say, as it pleased him.
 Then all kept very silent.
 The king told Reynaert to speak.
 Reynaert was full of low tricks.
 It seemed to him that his luck was great.
 2220 He said: ‘Now be silent, all of you,
 because the king wishes it.
 I shall describe without written record
 the traitors to you in this assembly in such a way that I shall spare no one 2225 whom I ought to accuse.
 Whoever is thus disgraced, should be ashamed!’
 Now hear all of you

the murder plot – something unheard of in medieval feudal society – Reynaert strengthens the truth value of his accusations (2233-37 and cf. 2518-27). When a little later he lies to the king and queen, the tale’s listeners know more than the royal couple. In this way the sense of Reynaert’s cleverness is strengthened. See also the note to 2164-78. Grimbeert is absent and subsequently it is revealed that Reynaert’s father has died (2481-83); neither can, therefore, contradict the charges.

2228 erdschen vader: his own father, as opposed to the heavenly father of all mankind.

2243-76 Reynaert describes the conspiracy, which his father is said to have devised and financed. In his story, the five animals swear that they will crown Bruun in Aachen. That places the bear in the capital of the Roman Empire and on Charlemagne's throne. The

how Reynaert will accuse
 his own father of treason 2230 as well as one of his dearest relatives;
 that was Grimbeert the badger,
 who was very fond of him!
 Reynaert did this as he intended that 2235 his words about his enemies should be the more credited when he accused them of treason.
 Now hear how he began this!
 Reynaert said: 'Once upon a time 2240 my lord and father had found the treasure of King Ermelinc
 in a hidden place.
 After my father had found the treasure,
 he became, in no time at all,
 2245 so overconfident and so proud that he looked down on all the animals who earlier had been his equals.
 He had Tybeert the cat travel to the Ardennes, that wild region, 2250 where he met Bruun the bear.
 He wished Bruun Godspeed,
 and he invited him to come to Flanders,
 and would he like to become king.
 Bruun was glad of this:
 2255 he had wanted it for a long time.
 Then he went to Flanders and arrived in Waes, that lovely region,
 where he met my father.
 My father sent for reliable Grimbeert

theme of treason in Van den vos Reynaerde is reminiscent of similar themes in Charlemagne epics, in which traitors temporarily manage to manipulate the king by means of bribes or false accusations in such a way that he treats a loyal vassal unjustly. However, eventually feudal order is restored. The point of the joke is that Reynaert pretends that there are traitors at work in King Nobel's court and that he himself is the loyal vassal, whereas the reality is exactly the other way around: it is Reynaert who will prove to be the (successful) traitor, while the so-called traitors are Nobel's loyal vassals. In addition the feudal order will have disappeared for good at the end of the story (cf. 1770-95, 2486-90, 3399-3410, 3436-51 and see pp. 25-26).

2270a Another reminder that the fox scalded the skin off Ysingrijn's scalp with boiling water. See the notes to 1499-1503 and 1951-52.

2260 and grey Ysingrijn;
 Tybeert the cat was the fifth and they came to a village called Hijfte.
 Between Hijfte en Ghent
 they held their council 2265 on a dark night.
 There they gathered through the devil's power and the devil's might and swore there in the waste land
 all five to the king's death.

2270 Now hear a great marvel:
 they swore on Ysingrijn's tonsure, 2270a all five of them, that they would 2270b get Bruun on the throne in Aachen
 2270c and would make him a mighty king.
 2270d They also agreed to the following:
 if any of the king's relatives was to object, my father would with his silver and with his gold 2275 oppose them to such an extent that they would be disgraced.
 That I know and I shall tell you how.

One morning, very early,
 it so happened that my nephew the badger 2280 was a little drunk with wine and he confided in good faith
 in my wife, Lady Hermeline,
 and told her all about it, detail by detail,
 as they were walking on the heath.
 2285 My wife, who is a special lady, gave Grimbeert her promise
 that it would remain a secret.
 As soon as she reached the wood
 where I was and she met me, 2290 she told it me at once.
 But she did it in secret.
 Also she told it me with such evidence

2299-2322 The story of the frogs who want to be ruled was known in the Middle Ages both in the vernacular and in Latin in the form of an Aesopian fable. It cannot be determined whether Willem used the Middle Dutch Esopet or the Middle Latin tradition. In most versions of the Aesopian fable the frogs do not find themselves having to cope with a stork, but that I was so convinced of the truth that all my hairs

 2295 stood upright for great fear.
 My heart truly became
 as cold as ice.
 Take good heed of the following.
 The frogs used to be free 2300 and yet they complained that they had no one with authority over them.
 And they got together and sent up a loud croaking to God
 to give them, by his command, 2305 a king who would have power over them.
 This begged the old ones and the young ones
 with loud croaking, with a loud noise.
 God heard the frogs
 at a certain time of year 2310 and sent them king stork, who killed and devoured them
 wherever he found them,
 both in the water and in the field.
 Where he could get them in his power,
 2315 he was always merciless towards them.
 Then they complained; it was too late.
 It was too late, I'll tell you why:
 they who used to be free
 will irreversibly 2320 be subjected to him for ever more and live eternally in fear of king stork.
 You, my lords, poor and rich,
 I feared something similar 2325 might befall you now.
 Then I took the care of all of us upon myself.
 Thus I have looked after you;

with a snake. Reynaert uses the fable to illustrate that Nobel's good kingship is preferable to the cruel regime of anti-king Bruun, who would terrorize his subjects as the stork did the frogs. Towards the end of Van den vos Reynaerde the implications are that the fable may be re-interpreted as heralding Nobel's new regime, in which only the fittest survive.

Waer mijn vader, die lusteghe houde,

and for this you give me little thanks now!
I know Bruun as false and malicious 2330 and full of violence.
I thought: if he becomes our lord,
then I fear very much that we would all be lost.
I knew the king as noble 2335 and gentle and kind-hearted and merciful towards all animals.
It seemed to me in all respects
a poor exchange,
which could bring us 2340 neither honour nor profit.
This I pondered and thought.
I was extremely concerned
how such a terrible business might be thwarted 2345 and my father's evil plan frustrated, who intended to make a peasant, a glutton,
king and lord.
Incessantly I prayed to God and begged that he might allow the king, my lord, 2350 to retain his dominion.
For I was fully aware of the following:
if my father kept his treasure,
he and his accomplices would be sure to execute the plan
2355 so that the king would be overthrown.
 Deeply immersed in many thoughts
I often found myself, wondering how I might find out where the treasure lay hidden that my father had found.
2360 I kept a close guard at all times on my father and lay in wait
in many a wood, in many a hedgerow,
both in the field and in the wood.
Wherever my crafty old father 2365 went or walked,
whether it was dry or marshy,

- waest bi nachte, waest bi daghe,
 ic was emmer in die laghe.
 Waest bi daghe, waest bi nachte, 2370 ic was emmer in die wachte.

whether it was by night or by day,
 I was ever spying on him.
 Whether by day or by night,
 2370 I was ever watchful.
 Then, one time it so happened that I covered myself with large ferns and lay flat on the earth and would dearly have known something 2375 about the treasure that I coveted.
 Then I saw my father emerge from a hole.
 Then I began to have hopes of the treasure
 as a result of the wily way
 2380 in which he behaved, as I shall tell you.
 For when he came out of the hole,
 I watched carefully, and noticed that he looked around to see if anyone was near.
 2385 And when he did not see anyone,
 he greeted the light of day
 and stopped up the hole with sand,
 making it even with the ground around it.
 That I saw this, he did not realize.
 2390 Then I saw, before he left that place,
 that he dragged his tail
 across where his feet had been,
 and covered his tracks with earth.
 There I learned from my cunning old father 2395 a masterly little trick that I did not know before.
 In this way my father went away from there, in the direction of the village, where the cocks and the plump hens were.
 2400 As soon as I dared show myself
 I jumped up and went to the hole.
 I did not wish to be in uncertainty any longer
 and I got there fast.
 Quickly I scratched away the sand 2405 with my paws and crawled in.

2442 This is the Lower German area.

There I found great booty.
 There I found silver and gold.
 There is no one present here, however old,
 who ever saw so much together!
 2410 Then I did not hesitate one moment,
 I started dragging and carrying without a cart or wagon,
 both by day and by night,
 with all the power that I had.
 2415 My wife, Lady Hermeline, helped me.
 We had to give ourselves great trouble before we had taken the enormous treasure to a different hole,
 where it was better within our reach.
 2420 We carried it to a hole under a bush
 without being noticed.
 Then I was in the possession of the treasure.
 Now hear what those who had betrayed the king, did in the meantime.
 2425 Bruun the bear sent his salutation secretly through the land and promised great riches to all who would serve him for pay.
 2430 He promised to dole out to them
 silver and gold generously.
 My father traversed the entire country
 with the writs from Bruun.
 Little did he know that the thieves 2435 had got to his treasure,
 of which they had relieved him.
 If the treasure had not been made away with,
 he would have been able to buy
 the entire city of London with it.
 2440 So much did he profit by all his running around!
 When my father had crossed all the land between the Elbe and the Somme

- hadde gheloepen al dat lant

Ende als hi quam ter selver stat

ende sijn hol was uptebroken.
2480 Wat holpe vele hieraf ghesproken?
Doe mijn vader dat vernam,

in all directions
 and had enlisted many a brave soldier 2445 with his gold,
 who would come to his aid
 once it was summer,
 my father returned to where he found Bruun and his companions.
 2450 Then he told them of the great troubles and the many dangers that he had experienced before the high fortresses in the land of Saxony,
 where the hunters had passed 2455 every day with their dogs which had terrified him many times.
 All this he said quite casually.
 Afterwards my father produced lists that were much to Bruun's liking, 2460 which contained twelve hundred named relatives of Lord Ysingrijn, with sharp claws, with huge maws,
 quite apart from the cats and the bears,
 all of whom were in Bruun's pay, 2465 and the foxes and the badgers
 from Thuringia and from Saxony.
 All of them had sworn that if they were paid
 twenty days' wages in advance, 2470 they would, according to their powers,
 be sure to obey Bruun's orders.
 All this I put a stop to, thank God!
 When my father had delivered his message, he wanted to go 2475 and have a look at his treasure.
 And when he arrived in the same place
 as where he had left it earlier, the treasure was completely gone
 and his hole broken open.
 2480 What use is it to dwell on it?
 When my father saw it,

wart hi zeerich ende gram,
dat hi van torne hem selven hinc.
Dus bleef achter Brunen dinc 2485 bi miere behendichede al.
Nu meerct hier mijn ongheval:
heere Ysingrine ende Brune de vraet

Die coninc entie coninghinne,
die beede hopen ten ghewinne,

ende baden hem dat hi wel dade

Ende alse Reynaerd horde dat, sprac hi: ‘Soudic hu wijsen mijn goet,
heere coninc, die mi hanghen doet?
So waer ic huut minen zinne!’
2500 ‘Neen, Reynaert,’ sprac die coninghinne, ‘mine heere sal hu laten leven [207va]
ende sal hu vriendelike vergheven

ende ghi sult voert meer sijn vroet 2505 ende goet ende ghetrauwe.’
Reynaerd sprac: ‘Dit doe ic, vrauwe, indien dat mi de coninc nu

dat hi mi gheve sine hulde 2510 ende hi al mine sculde
wille vergheven ende ommedat
so willic hem wijsen den scat, den coninc, aldaer hi leghet.’
Die coninc sprac: ‘Ic ware ontweghet, 2515 wildic Reynaerde vele gheloven.

2491-2541 The moment when the king and queen take Reynaert aside and ask him to show them the treasure (2491-95) is of paramount importance for the story. Blinded by their greed the royal couple opts for private (financial) gain. In this way it becomes evident that the community of the court no longer presents a united front to the fox. Reynaert has succeeded in creating a schism (see pp. 25-26). The fox subsequently leads the conversation in a

he became so miserable and angry that he hanged himself from sheer frustration.
 And so Bruun's plan came to nothing,
 2485 entirely as a result of my cunning.
 Now observe my ill luck:
 Lord Ysingrijn and Bruun the glutton now clearly are the king's trusted counsellors, 2490 and poor Reynaert is the scapegoat!
 The king and the queen,
 both of whom hoped to profit,
 took Reynaert apart to discuss the matter and asked him if he would be so good 2495 as to show his treasure to them.
 And when Reynaert heard this,
 he said: 'Would I show my property to you,
 Lord King, who is having me hanged?
 Then I would be out of my mind!'
 2500 'No, Reynaert,' said the queen,
 'my lord will let you live
 and will benevolently forgive and forget the ill feeling that he felt towards you, while you shall henceforth be sensible 2505 and virtuous and loyal.'
 Reynaert said: 'That I will, my lady,
 if the king firmly promises me now
 in your presence
 that he will give me his support 2510 and that he will forgive me all I am guilty of; and in return
 I will show the king
 where the treasure is kept.'
 The king said: 'I'd be misled 2515 if I believed all that Reynaert is saying.

subtle way towards a deal: mercy in exchange for the treasure (2496-99, 2506-10). The king, who still mistrusts the fox (2514-17), allows himself to be persuaded by his wife (2500-5, 2518-27, 2528-33). Nevertheless Nobel threatens to persecute Reynaert's descendants for ever if the fox should persist in his wicked ways (2534-37).

Hem es dat stelen ende dat roven ende dat lieghen gheboren int been.'
 Die coninghinne sprac: 'Heere, neen!
 Ghi moghet Reynaerde gheloven wel.
 2520 Al was hi hier tevoren fel,
 hi nes nu niet dat hi was.
 Ghi hebt ghehoert hoe hi den das
 ende sinen vader hevet bedreghen met morde, die hi wel beteghen 2525 mochte hebben andren dieren, wildi meer zijn argertieren
 ofte fel ofte onghetrauwe.'
 Doe sprac die coninc: 'Gentel vrouwe,
 al waendic dat mi soude scaden, 2530 eist dat ghijt mi dorret raden,
 so willic laten up hu ghenent dese vorworde ende dit covent up Reynaerts trauwe staen.
 Newaer ic segghe hem sonder waen:
 2535 doet hi meer eerchede, alle die hem ten tienden lede
 sijn belanc, sullent becoepen.' Reynaerd sach den coninc beloepen
 ende wart blide in sinen moet 2540 ende sprac: 'Heere, ic ware onvroet, ne gheloofdic hu niet also.'
 Doe nam die coninc een stro
 ende vergaf Reynaerde algader [207vb]
 die wanconst van sinen vader 2545 ende zijns selves mesdaet toe.
 Al was Reynaert blide doe,
 dat en dinct mi gheen wonder wesen!
 Ja ne was hi van der doot ghenesen?
 Doe Reynaert quite was ghelaten, 2550 was hi blide utermaten
 ende sprac: 'Coninc, edel heere,

2542-45 By handing him a straw, Nobel forgives Reynaert's sins. It concerns a symbolic legal procedure, the festucatio or halminghe, during which the straw was thrown down or broken

For him stealing and robbing and lying is second nature.'
 The queen said: 'My lord, no!
 You may certainly believe Reynaert.
 2520 Even though he was wicked before,
 he is no longer what he used to be.
 You have heard how he accused the badger and his father of a plot to kill you, which he might easily 2525 have attributed to other animals, if he meant to persist in being wicked
 and mean or disloyal.'
 Then the king said: 'Noble lady,
 even if I thought that it would harm me, 2530 if you dare advise me to do it,
 then I will, on your responsibility,
 let this agreement and this covenant depend on Reynaert's loyalty.
 But I shall be blunt with him:
 2535 if he perpetrates wicked deeds again,
 all those related to him to the tenth degree will suffer for it.'
 Reynaert noticed that the king was swayed
 and rejoiced inwardly, 2540 and said: 'Lord, I would be unwise
 if I did not promise you that.'
 Then the king picked up a straw and fully forgave Reynaert his father's enmity
 2545 as well as his own crimes.
 That Reynaert was very pleased then does not seem a marvel to me!
 Had he not just escaped a certain death?
 When Reynaert had been pardoned, 2550 he was overjoyed
 and said: 'King, noble lord,

as a sign of the complete exoneration of all guilt. The official reconciliation, witnessed by the assembled court, is to follow at a later stage (2764-95).

God moete hu loenen al die eere die ghi mi doet ende mijn vrouwe.
Ic secht hu wel bi miere trouwe 2555 dat ghi mi vele eeren doet, so groet eere ende so groet goet
dat niemen nes onder die zonne
dien ic also wale jonne
mijns scats ende miere trauwen 2560 als ic hu doe ende miere vrouwen.’
Reynaert nam een stroe voer hem
ende sprac: ‘Heere coninc, nem.
Hier gheve ic di up den scat die wijlen Ermelinc besat.’
2565 Die coninc ontfinc dat stroe
ende dancte Reynaerde zoe als quansijs: ‘Dese maect mi heere.’
Reynaerts herte louch so zeere
dat ment wel na an hem vernam, 2570 doe die coninc so gheorsam
algader was te sinen wille.
Reynaert sprac: ‘Heere, zwichet stille;
merket waer mine redene gaet.
Int oesthende van Vlaendren staet 2575 een bosch, ende heet Hulsterloe.
Coninc, ghi moghet wesen vroe,
mochti onthouden dit:
een borne, heet Kriekepit,

2580 Heere coninc, ghi ne dorst niet wanen
dat ic hu de waerheit yet messe.
Dats een de meeste wildernessse die men hevet in eenich rike.

2561-65 The festucatio is doubled here, as Reynaert transfers his treasure symbolically by using a straw.

2572 Literally zwichet stille means ‘be silent’.

2574-93 The fox gives precise indications where the treasure is to be found. In the forest of Hulsterloe, a historically identifiable place, Kriekeputte is to be found, according to Reynaert. At the time of writing this was probably an existing spring. Reynaert uses these realistic toponyms to impress the reliability of his story upon his audience. For Willem’s audience the references to realistic locations will have served to enhance the dramatic irony of the episode (see p. 22). The may God reward you for all the honour

 you and my lady do me.
 I assure you on my pledge of loyalty
 2555 that you do me a great honour, so much honour and so much favour that there is no one under the sun to whom I so willingly surrender
 my treasure and my loyalty
 2560 as I do to you and my lady.’
 Reynaert held up a straw and said: ‘Lord King, take it.
 I herewith hand over to you the treasure which earlier was in Ermelinc’s possession.’ 2565 The king received the straw and thanked Reynaert
 as if he meant to say: ‘This makes me its master.’
 In his heart Reynaert laughed so much that it almost showed, 2570 when the king so obediently
 did entirely as he wished.
 Reynaert said: ‘Lord, listen;
 mind what I have to say.
 In the east of Flanders there is 2575 a wood, which is called Hulsterloe.
 King, you will be pleased to remember this:
 a spring, called Kriekeputte,
 runs towards the southwest not far from there.
 2580 Lord King, you need not fear that I tell you anything less than the truth.
 It is one of the wildest regions that can be found in any realm.

fox characterizes the place as a dismal area, which shows a striking resemblance to the cursed place described in the Bible in the Book of Isaiah (34,10-12), which is prophesied to lie waste for generations and through which no one shall ever pass. It is said there that the cormorant and the bittern possess it, while the owl and the raven shall dwell in it, and that it has no rulers. By Reynaert’s location of his treasure in this very similar locus terribilis and his intention to make the king go there (2597 ff.), the story’s audience is warned in a subtle way of Nobel’s impending downfall. The delightful place described at the beginning of the poem (41-43) proves to be an illusion; the gruesome surroundings of Kriekeputte are Nobel’s wretched reality (see p. 24).

 “Ay Reynaert, ghetrauwe vos,

2589 There has been considerably debate about the word scuvuut. It is usually translated as ‘night owl’. This makes little sense, however, as the owl is already mentioned in the same

I also tell you truthfully 2585 that sometimes for as long as half a year
 neither man nor woman comes to that spring,
 nor any living creature
 except the owl and the jay 2590 who have their nests there in the bushes, or any other little bird
 that would prefer to be somewhere else
 and has alighted there by chance.
 And that is where my treasure lies hidden.
 2595 Listen well, this is to your advantage:
 the place is called Kriekeputte.
 You must go there and my lady.
 Do not consider anyone trustworthy enough to have him go in your stead.
 2600 Take good note, king, in God's name, just go there yourself and when you get to the pool in question,
 you will see young birch trees.
 Lord King, this you should note:
 2605 go to that birch
 which is nearest the pool, king.
 The treasure lies buried under it.
 There you must dig and scratch away
 a little moss on one side.
 2610 There you will find many pieces of jewellery set in gold, costly and beautiful.
 There you will find the crown that King Ermelinc wore and many other precious objects:
 2615 gems, goldsmiths' work;
 it could not be bought for a thousand marks.
 Ah, king, once you have these goods,
 how often you will think to yourself:
 "Ah, Reynaert, faithful fox,

line. With the translation 'jay', like the crow and the raven a thief and a scoundrel, we follow Van Gasse 1993.

- 2620 die hier grouves in dit mos

Doe andwoerde die coninc saen:
‘Reynaert, sal ic die vaert bestaen,

Ende ghi moet ons, Reynaert,

Ende also als ic versta,

Dit was Reynaerde ombequame ende verbalch hem ende seide: ‘Ja, ja, coninc, ghi zijter also na

2640 Waendi dat ic hu die Leye
wille wijsen in die flume Jordane?
Ic sal hu wel toeghen, dat ic wane,

Lude riep hi: ‘Cuwaert, comt hare!

Die diere saghen dese vaert;

Cuwaert die ghinc met vare;
hem wonderde wat die coninc woude.

2654d dat mi kosten soude mijn vel,

- 2620 who buried under this moss here
 this treasure with all your cunning, God be with you wherever you are.”
- Then the king answered at once:
 ‘Reynaert, if I were to undertake the journey,
 2625 you must come along.
 And you, Reynaert, must help us dig up the treasure.
 I don’t think that by myself
 I shall ever get there.
- 2630 I have heard Aachen mentioned and Paris. Is it near there?
 But I fancy, Reynaert, that you are trying to curry favour, and are bluffing.
 Kriekeputte, that you mention here,
 2635 is, I reckon, a made-up name.’
- This irritated Reynaert
 and it annoyed him and he said: ‘Yes, yes, king, you are as close as Cologne is to the month of May.
- 2640 Do you think I want to make you believe that the Leie is the river Jordan?
 I will soon give you, so I expect,
 plenty of evidence quite openly.’
 Loudly he shouted: ‘Cuwaert, come here!
 2645 Come before the king, Cuwaert.’
- The animals saw him move;
 they all wondered what it meant.
 Cuwaert went with trepidation;
 he wondered what the king wanted.
- 2650 Reynaert said: ‘Cuwaert, are you cold?
 You are trembling. Cheer up, don’t be afraid and tell my lord the king the truth.
 I urge you to do this by the loyalty that you owe to my Lady Gente 2654a and to himself.’
- 2654b Then Cuwaert said: ‘I may be damned, 2654c even if I knew for certain 2654d that it would cost me my life,

- 2654e oftic liege enich wort,
 2654f al waert van enige mort,
 2654g want gi mi manet bi der trouwen
 2654h die ic miere liever vrouwen
 2655 ende den coninc sculdich bem.'
 Doe sprac Reynaert: 'So secht hem:
 weetstu waer Kiekeputte steet?'
 Cuwaert sprac: 'Of ict weet?
 Ja ic, hoe sout wesen soe?
 2660 Ne staet hi niet bi Hulsterloe,

 Dat was tevoren eer ic met Rijn

 2675 'O wy,' sprac Reynaert, 'soete Rijn,

 2685 sprac Reynaert, 'haestelic, Cuwaert.

2662-74 The hare probably gives a truthful report of past events. Having stated that near Kiekeputte he suffered hunger, cold and poverty, he names two animals: Reynout the counterfeiter (a dog?) and the small dog Rijn, who turns out to be a poet. It is unclear whether

2654e if I lie a single word,
 2654f even if it concerned some crime or other,
 2654g since you urge me to do this by the loyalty
 2654h that I owe my dear lady
 2655 as well as the king.’
 Then Reynaert said: ‘Well, tell him:
 do you know where Kriekeputte is?’
 Cuwaert said: ‘Do I know that?
 Yes, of course, how could I not?
 2660 Isn’t it near Hulsterloe,
 near that swamp in the waste land?
 I have endured great suffering there,
 and much hunger and often cold
 and constant poverty 2665 in Kriekeputte, for so many days,
 that I cannot forget it.
 How could I forget this:
 that unscrupulous Reynout
 made the counterfeit money there 2670 with which he earned a living for himself and his accomplices.
 That was before I became firm friends with Rijn,
 who often payed my school fees for me.’
 2675 ‘Alas,’ said Reynaert, ‘darling Rijn,
 dear friend, handsome little dog,
 God give you were here now!
 You would show before these animals
 in fine verse, if necessary, 2680 that I never was so bold
 as to do anything
 by which I might justly arouse the king’s wrath against me.
 Go back to the servants again,’ 2685 said Reynaert, ‘and hurry, Cuwaert.

the author alludes to a beast narrative that is no longer extant, or to real persons and events.
 Cuwaert’s statement that counterfeiters dwelled near Kriekeputte is tendentious in light of Reynaert’s imaginary treasure.

2706-16 Reynaert gives a new twist to the story of how the wolf entered a monastery and was given a tonsure (see notes to 1499-1503, 1951-52 and 2270a). Reynaert is supposed to have incited the hungry monk Ysingrijn to leave the monastery, and it is for this that he is now under a papal ban. His excommunication is invented by the fox to prevent having to

My lord the king has nothing further to discuss with you.'

Cuwaert went back and left the king's council there.

2690 Reynaert said: 'King, is it true what I told you?' – 'Reynaert, it is.

Forgive me, it was wrong of me
to mistrust you somewhat.

Reynaert, good friend, now consider 2695 the proposal to come with us to the pool where the birch tree stands under which the treasure lies buried.'

Reynaert said: 'What you say is remarkable.

Don't you think I would not be overjoyed, 2700 king, if I were in a position to go along with you,

as both of us should like,
without you, lord, committing a sin?

No, it is as I shall openly declare 2705 and tell you, even though it is disgraceful.

When Ysingrijn in the devil's name entered an order some time ago
and his crown was shaved on becoming a monk,
he found that the rations on which six monks lived 2710 were not enough for him.

He complained of hunger and moaned
so much that I took pity on him.

When he moaned and got weaker
it distressed me, being his relative, 2715 and I advised him to run away.

That is why I have been excommunicated by the pope.

Tomorrow as the sun rises

I intend to go to Rome for an indulgence.

From Rome I want to go to the Holy Land;
2720 from there I shall certainly not return accompany the king to Kriekeputte, where it will soon become obvious that there is no treasure.

2706 In the devil's name implies insincerity.

2719 overzee: literally 'overseas', that is, across the Mediterranean to the Holy Land.

 'So ne doe ic,' sprac Reynaert.
 'Ic ga morghin te Rome waert,

 Doe dese tale was ghedaen,
 doe ghinc Nobel die coninc staen up eene hoghe stage van steene,
- [209ra]

2725-34 According to Reynaert he was sentenced by the full ecclesiastical court, where his excommunication was imposed by deacon Herman. This means that the fox has incurred a major excommunication or anathema: he has been cursed and is excluded totally from the ecclesiastical community. It is not known if there is a historical person associated with the deacon. On account of the excommunication the fox not only has to go to Rome – the pope is the only person who can absolve from excommunication – he also cannot possibly accompany Nobel before

- until I have done so much,
king, that I can associate with you to your honour and advantage,
if I return to this country.
- 2725 It would not be very nice,
Lord King, if you should go about with someone who has been excommunicated
as I am now, God help me!’
- 2730 The king said: ‘Reynaert, have you been under a ban for a long time?’ Then Reynaert said:
‘Certainly, it has been three years since I was banished in the presence of deacon Herman and the full ecclesiastical court.’
- 2735 The king said: ‘Reynaert, as you have been put under a ban, I would be reproached, Reynaert, for allowing you to associate with me.
I shall make Cuwaert or someone else
go to the treasure with me
- 2740 and I advise you, Reynaert,
do not fail to depart
so that you may have the ban lifted.’
‘I will not fail to do so,’ said Reynaert.
‘I shall go to Rome tomorrow,
- 2745 if it goes as I have planned.’
The king said: ‘You appear to be full of very good intentions.
God give that you may achieve this,
Reynaert, for the sake of you and me
- 2750 and everybody else.’
When this conversation had ended,
King Nobel went to stand upon
a high stone stage,

departing to retrieve the treasure. Any contact with a banned person was strictly forbidden.

2751-95 Before the assembled court, Nobel pardons the fox (2777-79). The king twists Reynaert’s account of his excommunication and the resulting journey to the pope in Rome. The king remains silent about Reynaert’s excommunication, but tells the animals that, as part of the reconciliation, Reynaert is going on a pilgrimage for the expiation of his sins (2787-95). He also does not mention that in reality he has promised to pardon the fox in return for a treasure.

2768-86 Nobel announces that he is reconciled with Reynaert. He has quashed the fox's conviction and has pardoned him. However, there is something wrong here: the king arranges the reconciliation for himself alone. Although Reynaert has been charged by a

where he normally only stood 2755 when he presided over a lawsuit at his court.
 The animals sat in a circle
 round about in the grass,
 each according to his birth.
 Reynaert stood near the queen,
 2759a to whom he had every reason to be grateful.
 2760 – ‘Pray for me, noble lady,
 that I may safely see you again.’
 She said: ‘May the Lord who rules everything, give you full absolution for your sins.’
 The king and the queen
 2765 took up their positions full of good cheer before the animals, poor and rich.
 The king said graciously:
 ‘Reynaert has come to our court here,
 and intends, for which I praise God, 2770 to mend his ways wholeheartedly.
 And my lady the queen has taken his part to such an extent that I have become his friend and he is reconciled with me 2775 and I have given him the free use of his body and his limbs.
 I proclaim full peace for Reynaert.
 Once more I command peace for him,
 and also a third time,
 2780 and I order all of you, at the peril of your lives,
 to honour Reynaert and his wife and his children,
 wherever you meet them,
 whether it be by night or by day.
 2785 I do not wish to hear any more complaints about Reynaert’s actions.
 Even though he was callous in the past,

number of animals, none of them receives satisfaction for having suffered proven wrongs.
 Impelled by his craving for the treasure, Nobel acts selfishly (see pp. 25-26).

2775-76 This means that Reynaert has been discharged from prosecution.

Revenge and flight

Tiecelin heard these words and he flew to where he had come from
 and he found the three friends.
 Now hear what he will tell them!
 2800 He said: 'Wretches, what are you doing here?
 Reynaert is master butler
 at court and extremely powerful.
 The king has pardoned him
 of all his crimes
 2805 and all three of you have been betrayed.'
 Ysingrijn turned on Tiecelyn
 and gave a curt reply:
 'I reckon you're lying, Lord Raven.'
 With these words he ran off
 2810 and Bruun followed suit.
 They went as fast as their legs
 could carry them towards the king's court.
 Tybeert stayed behind, very frightened,
 and he stayed where he sat on top of the gallows.
 2815 He was so extremely worried about saving his skin that he was quite prepared to leave his eye unavenged
 that he had lost in the priest's barn, 2820 if he might be reconciled with Reynaert.

2815 sinen ruwen balghe: literally: 'his rough pelt'.

2825-40 Bruun and Ysingrijn are taken prisoner without a trial and are badly maltreated. The king perverts the law.

2841-96 Nobel has announced that, as part of the reconciliation, Reynaert will undertake a pilgrimage. The fox (who himself had not mentioned a pilgrimage explicitly) uses this new development to revenge himself on his enemies. At Reynaert's suggestion the

He was so scared that he knew nothing better to do than to sit on the pole.

He deeply regretted all the time that he had ever got to know Reynaert.

2825 Ysingrijn pushed his way very roughly to a place before the queen and uttered with a fierce demeanour such coarse accusations of Reynaert that the king was roused to great anger 2830 and had Ysingrijn taken prisoner and Bruun too. Straightaway they were apprehended and tied up.
You never saw rabid dogs
more deeply humiliated than they did them, 2835 Ysingrijn and Bruun also!
They were treated like hateful foes.
They were tied up so tightly there that the entire night
they were unable to move 2840 so much as a single limb.

Now hear what more he will do to them,
Reynaert, who treated them very cruelly!
He got them to cut from Bruun's back a piece of skin 2845 that was given him by way of a scrip,
a foot long and a foot broad.
Now Reynaert would be quite ready,
provided he had four new shoes.

Now hear what he will do,
2850 how he will obtain four shoes!
He whispered to the queen:
'Lady, I am your pilgrim.
Here is my uncle, Ysingrijn.
He has four stout shoes.

prisoners, as well as Haersint, are partly flayed to provide Reynaert with suitable attributes for his journey. In a creative way the author of Van den vos Reynaerde makes use here of a well-known motif from the literary tradition: the wolf who, on the fox's advice, has to give up his skin to cure the sick king lion (see pp. 10-11).

2885-87 To tame and train a newly caught falcon it would have its eyes ‘seeled’: ‘Seeling consisted of putting one neat stitch through the lower eyelids with a linen thread and tying the ends over the head (or [...] stitching through the upper lids and tying under the beak’). This was commonly done before transportation by the merchants, so as to keep the birds

2855 Help me, so I can put them on.
 I shall take your soul into my care.
 It is a pilgrim's duty
 to remember in his prayers
 all the good that was ever done for him.
 2860 You may benefit your soul by giving me shoes.
 Have Haersint, my aunt,
 give two of her shoes.
 You may do this in all decency:
 she will stay quietly at home.'
 2865 Full of good will the queen spoke:
 'Reynaert, you should not lack shoes: you have to travel
 in foreign lands, in God's care,
 across mountains and through woods, 2870 and over stumps and stones.
 Yours is not an easy task,
 so that it is necessary for you to have shoes.
 I will be pleased to use my influence to get them.
 Ysingrijn's would suit you well:
 2875 they are very strong and robust,
 the ones that Ysingrijn and his wife wear.
 Even if it cost them their lives,
 each of them must give you two shoes
 with which you will be able to make your journey.' 2880 In this way did the false pilgrim achieve that Lord Ysingrijn lost the skin of both his front paws
 from his knees
 all the way down to his nails.
 2885 You never saw a bird having its eyelids stitched together make less of a stir than Ysingrijn moved his limbs
 when he was divested so pitifully of his shoes that the blood ran down from his toes!

calmer' (Cummins 1988, 200). It is not clear whether the narrator means here that the wolf tries to keep as still as possible to avoid even more pain, or that he resists vehemently. In the second case the author's comment is ironic.

2897-98 What is meant here is that Reynaert was in a very good mood. Cf. also the note to 2990-94.

2899-2912 In accordance with his earlier behaviour towards the animals that he tricked, Reynaert again taunts his victim: he pretends that he will give the she-wolf a share in the indulgences he will acquire, as he will be wearing the shoes she ‘gave’ him on his pilgrimage. He also calls Haersint moye (‘aunt’, 2900, 2911) and one of his favourite relatives (maghen, 2906),

2890 When Ysingrijn had been unshoed,
 Lady Haersint, the she-wolf,
 had to lie down on the grass,
 looking very sad,
 and had the skin stripped off 2895 as well as the nails of her back feet.
 This action was balm to Reynaert's distressed mood.
 Now hear how he proceeds to lament!
 2900 'Aunt,' he said, 'aunt,
 how much misery
 you have had to endure on my account!
 I am very sorry, but in this case it pleases me. I shall tell you why.
 2905 You are, I assure you,
 one of my dearest relatives.
 For that reason I will wear your shoes.
 God knows you will benefit by it.
 You will share in the papal indulgences 2910 and in the full pardon,
 dear aunt, that I will acquire in your shoes
 in the Holy Land.'
 Lady Haersint was in so much pain
 that she could hardly speak:
 2915 'Oh, Reynaert, may God avenge me
 for you imposing your will on us!'
 Ysingrijn was furious and remained silent,
 like his companion Bruun,
 but they were utterly despondent.
 2920 They lay bound and injured.
 If at that time Tybeert the cat
 had been there,

thus alluding once again to the supposed family relationship between himself and his 'uncle' Ysingrijn. By admitting that she has had much to bear from him, the fox probably refers to their adultery and her rape (see pp. 32-33).

2920-25 Reynaert has cruelly revenged himself on his opponents and if the opportunity had presented itself, he would have treated Tybeert in a similar manner. Reynaert's unlimited thirst for revenge provides a sharp contrast with his appearance as a penitent pilgrim.

2927 At the crack of dawn on the third day Reynaert prepares himself for his departure as a pilgrim. This means that the fox's mendacious story, his pardon as well as the imprisonment and maltreatment of Bruun and the two wolves took place on the evening of the second day.

2941-84 In accordance with medieval tradition Nobel wants to have the attributes for the pilgrimage consecrated before they are handed to Reynaert (cf. the 'Benedictio peregrinorum ad loca sancta prodeuntium' in the Rituale Romanum, Tit. VIII, Cap. XI, dating prior to Vaticanum II). However, Reynaert has incurred a major excommunication which excludes him from all sacraments. It is for this reason that Belin initially objects to the king's request (how the ram knows that the fox has been excommunicated is not explained). As Nobel wishes to hide the true reason for this reconciliation with the fox – the treasure – it is in his

I dare say this with certainty:
 he had earlier done so much 2925 that he would not have escaped distress!
 What use would it serve if I told you more?
 The next day before dawn
 Reynaert had his shoes greased which earlier had belonged to Ysingrijn 2930 and his wife Lady Haersint, and had them tied securely round his feet and went to where he found the king
 and his wife the queen.
 2935 He said gently:
 ‘Lord, may God grant you a good day and my lady, whom I have every reason to praise.
 Now let Reynaert, your servant, be given 2940 staff and scrip and let me depart.’
 Then the king made
 the chaplain, Belin the ram, come hastily.
 And when he arrived before the king,
 the king said: ‘Here is 2945 this pilgrim; read him a lesson and give him scrip and staff.’
 Belin answered the king:
 ‘Lord, I am not allowed to do this.
 Reynaert himself has admitted
 2950 that he is under a papal ban.’
 The king said: ‘Belin, so what?

best interests to present Reynaert as a pilgrim who wishes to atone for his sins as a form of reconciliation. For that reason he finds Belin’s objection about Reynaert’s excommunication irksome. The king finds a way out by referring to a certain master Jufroet, who is said to teach that a sinner feeling perfect contrition may have the guilt of mortal sin removed purely by the intention of confessing his sins and undertaking a pilgrimage to the Holy Land (in other words, prior to departure and without intercession of the Church). It is not clear which theologian Nobel has in mind here. It has been suggested that the Benedictine abbot Goffridus Vindociniensis (ca. 1070-1132), who wrote about confession, is meant. Another possibility is that Willem had Geoffrey Ridel in mind, the theological adviser of King Henry II of England (1154-1189), who was excommunicated repeatedly.

2945 gheles: a text from the Bible or a prayer.

2960 Belin sprac ten coninc echt:
‘Ic en doere toe crom no recht

2965 Die coninc sprac: ‘In VIII weken

Master Jufroet teaches us:
 if a man had committed all on his own
 as many sins as all living people together, 2955 and if he wanted to renounce his wicked ways and go to confession and accept as a penitence
 to go to the Holy Land,
 he might still be absolved.'
 2960 Then Belin said to the king:
 'I will in no way
 perform any kind of religious rite, unless you are prepared to clear me
 with the bishop and with the deacon.'
 2965 The king said: 'In the next eight weeks
 I don't expect to ask this much of you.
 And also I would sooner see you hanged than ask you for anything today.'
 And when Belin heard 2970 that the king was angry with him, Belin became so frightened that he trembled with fear and went to prepare his altar and began to sing and read 2975 all that he considered suitable.
 When Belin the chaplain had meekly performed the service proper to that time of day,
 he hung around Reynaert's neck 2980 a scrip made of Bruun's skin.
 He also gave the scoundrel
 the staff in his hand with it,
 for his use. Then he was fully prepared for his journey.
 2985 Then he looked at the king.
 The bogus tears ran down along his whiskers
 as if in his heart he was terribly upset and suffering great distress.

2990-94 Reynaert is crying mock tears (gheveinsde tranen, 2986). He pretends to be very sad now that the time of his departure as a pilgrim aproaches (cf. also 3051-52). The narrator addresses his public with the ironic comment that Reynaert is crying purely because he is disappointed that he has not succeeded in harming more courtiers than just Bruun and Ysingrijn. Cf. also the note to 2897-98 and below.

2990 This was for no other reason than that he had not caused as much harm to all those he left behind
 as he had to Bruun and Ysingrijn,
 if that had been possible!
 2995 Nevertheless, standing there, he requested them all to pray for him
 as sincerely as they wished him to pray for all of them.
 The farewells took too long to his mind,
 3000 for he was eager to get away from there.
 He was constantly afraid,
 because he was aware of his guilt.
 Then the king said: 'I regret,
 Reynaert, that you are in such a hurry.'
 3005 – 'No, lord, it is time!
 One should not put off a good deed.
 With your permission, I wish to depart.'
 The king said: 'Go with God.'
 Then the king ordered the entire court 3010 to accompany Reynaert outside,
 with the exception of the prisoners.
 Now Reynaert has turned pilgrim and his uncle Ysingrijn and Bruun lie tied up 3015 and suffering from painful wounds.
 I am convinced that there is no one so downhearted between Poland and Schouwen
 because of a disaster that had befallen him, 3020 or he would have laughed
 on seeing Reynaert then!
 How amazing his departure was
 and how naturally did

3016-21 In this aside the narrator makes a distinction between the here-and-now of the fictional action and the doe (then, 3021) of the story. His public realizes that it cannot participate in the story, and cannot see the ludicrously attired fox anymore than the most miserable person between Poland and Schouwen can see him. The two regions symbolize the extreme east (Poland) and west (Schouwen was an island in the county of Zeeland).

3050 Daer hi van den coninc sciet,
so drouvelic hi hem gheliet
dat hem somen zeere ontfaremde.
Cuwaert den haze hi becamende:
'O wy, Cuwaert, sullen wi sceeden?
3055 Of God wilt, ghi sult mi gheleeden
ende mijn vrient Belin de ram.

3049-3138 The false pilgrim manages to lure two tame animals from the court to Manpertsus, where Reynaert is to say farewell to his wife and children. Cuwaert the hare enters the den at Reynaert's request to help comfort the fox's wife. Cuwaert does, indeed, offer solace, but does so physically rather than verbally: the fox takes him by the throat and kills him. Reynaert's confrontations with Cuwaert show how the story will develop: evil will reign supreme. At the time of their first encounter Reynaert's tuition as a pseudo-

the scrip and staff hang around his neck 3025 and did he wear all the shoes that he had tied around his legs,
 so that he might quite easily have been taken for a pilgrim!
 Reynaert laughed in his heart,
 3030 because all those who went with him in such a large gathering
 had earlier been ill-disposed towards him.

Then he said: 'King, it worries me
 to have you come with me so far.
 3035 I fear that it may do you harm.
 You have caught two criminals.
 If it should be so that they escape,
 you will have to be on your guard
 more than ever before.
 3040 Take care and let me go.'
 After these words he raised himself on his two back legs
 and urged all the animals, small and large,
 to pray for him,
 3045 if they all wished to profit
 by his good works.
 They all said that they would remember him in their prayers.

Now hear what Reynaert did next!
 3050 When he took leave of the king,
 he pretended to be so sad
 that some took great pity on him.
 He moaned to Cuwaert the hare:
 'Alas, Cuwaert, must we part?
 3055 God willing, you will accompany me
 with my friend Belin the ram.

cleric had not yet had the desired result; on the contrary, the failed murder attempt was one of the charges that led to the institution of legal proceedings. However, by the end of the story, Reynaert, this time in the guise of a false pilgrim, has conquered all problems. He does not let the hare escape a second time once he has it in his den. Belin the ram is waiting outside; his services will be abused by Reynaert to let Nobel know that he has been deceived.

Ghi twee, ghi ne daedt mi noint gram.

3070 hevet Reynaert dese II verdoort,
dat si met hem ghinghen voort

ende voer de porte van Manpertiaus.
Alse Reynaert voer de porte quam,

Ic moet in mine veste gaen;
Cuaert sal ingaen met mi.
Heere Belin, bidt hem dat hi

Belin sprac: 'Ic bids heme

3090 Als si in dat hol quamen, Cuaert ende Reynaert tsamen, doe vonden si vrouwe Hermelinen met haren cleenen welpkinen.

3075 neve: the form of address is used as a sign of friendship. See also 1278.

You two, you never gave me cause for anger.
 You must see me on my way.
 You are agreeable company
 3060 and of good repute and kindhearted and none of the animals complains of you.
 Steady is the way you both live,
 just as I did in the time
 when I was a hermit.
 3065 So long as you have leaves and grass,
 you do not hanker at all after bread or meat or dainty food.'
 With praise like this 3070 has Reynaert misled the two,
 so that they accompanied him until he arrived at his house and before the gate of Manpertuus.

When Reynaert arrived at the gate 3075 he said: 'Belin, cousin ram,
 you must wait here outside by yourself.
 I must go into my fortress;
 Cuwaert will come in with me.
 Lord Belin, impress upon him that he 3080 offers suitable comfort to Lady Hermeline and her little cubs,
 when I say goodbye to them.'
 Belin said: 'I appeal to him to comfort every one of them.'
 3085 Talking smoothly, Reynaert wheedled and cajoled so much and in so many ways
 that he deceived Cuwaert into coming with him into his den.

3090 When they entered the hole,
 Cuwaert and Reynaert together,
 they found Lady Hermeline there with her small cubs.

- 3095 Die was in zorghen ende in vare,
want so waent dat Reynaert ware

dat hi weder thuuswaert quam

Ic bem up hem met rechte gram!'
- 3115 Ende alse dat Cuaert vernam,
keerdi hem omme ende waende vlien,
maer dat ne conste hem niet ghescien,
want Reynaert hadde hem ondergaen

Ende Cuaert riep ghenadelike:
'Helpt mi, Belin! Waer sidi?
Dese peelgrijn verbijt mi!'
Dat roupen was sciere ghedaen,

3101a-3110 Reynaert answers Hermeline's question with a number of half-truths. It is right that he has become a pilgrim, but in actual fact he pretended to have been excommunicated and needing to go to the pope. The bear and wolf really have been caught, but the information that they have offered themselves as hostages so that Reynaert might go on a pilgrimage, is false. Earlier the king had ordained on pain of death that the fox and his family

She was worried and afraid, 3095 for she thought that Reynaert had been hanged. And then she saw that he came home again
 and was carrying staff and scrip;
 it struck her as a great marvel.
 3100 She was glad and said at once:
 'Reynaert, how did you escape?'
 3101a Reynaert said: 'I was caught,
 3101b but the king let me go.
 I have become a pilgrim.
 Lord Bruun and Lord Ysingrijn have become hostages for me.
 3105 The king has – thanks be to him – presented Cuwaert as lawful peace offering,
 to do with as we please.
 The king acknowledged that Cuwaert was the first 3110 to accuse us falsely before him.
 And by the loyalty that I owe
 you, Lady Hermeline:
 Cuwaert awaits grievous punishment.
 I have every reason to be angry with him!' 3115 And when Cuwaert heard that,
 he turned round and wanted to flee,
 but he could not do it for Reynaert had cut off the way to the gate and seized him at once 3120 by the throat with murderous intent.
 And Cuwaert shouted pitifully:
 'Help me, Belin! Where are you?
 This pilgrim is biting me to death!'
 The shouting soon ceased,
 3125 for Reynaert had straightaway should be honoured (2780-84), which in Reynaert's interpretation means that the king has made a gift of Cuwaert to the fox and his family. Cuwaert's earlier mention of the counterfeiter at Kriekeputte (2667-71) is blown up by Reynaert to a betrayal of his case. Reynaert's cryptic account results in dramatic irony: the audience knows more than does Hermeline. This is amusing and accentuates the perversion of Reynaert's verbal skills.

 Doe sprac Reynaert: 'Nu gaen wi heten

 Die welpine liepen ten ase

 Haren rauwe was wel cleene [211rb]

 3135 Ay, hoe dicke bat so goets

 'Wat ghiften es dat?' sprac Hermeline.
 3145 Reynaert sprac: 'Hets eene lijne

 Maer maghic, ic sal hem ontscricken,

 Soe sprac: 'Reynaert, wat mach dat zijn?'
 Reynaert sprac: 'Vrauwe, ic secht hu.

 Daer wonen hoenre ende pertrijsen

3134 As Cuwaert, according to Reynaert, had been delivered to him as lawful peace offering (in rechter zoene, 3106), this line appears to associate the consumption of the dead hare in a suggestive way with Christ's death on the cross, presented during the Last Supper as a sacrifice and celebrated as such in the Catholic mass (through the consecration and consumption of bread and wine in which Christ's broken body and spilled blood are substantially present).

3130-99 Reynaert realizes that King Nobel will exact revenge when he finds out that he has bitten his throat asunder.

 Then Reynaert said: 'Now let us eat
 of this good, fat hare.'
 The cubs ran to the food
 3130 and started to eat together.
 They did not in the least regret that Cuwaert had lost his life.
 Hermeline, Reynaert's wife,
 ate of the flesh and drank the blood.
 3135 Ah, how often did she wish the king
 well, who, in his generosity, had so delighted the little cubs
 with a delicious meal.
 Reynaert said: 'He is very pleased for you.
 3140 I am sure that if the king lives, he would gladly give us a present that he himself would not like to receive for seven gold marks.'
 'What gift is that?' said Hermeline.
 3145 Reynaert said: 'It is a rope with a crossbeam and two poles.
 But if I can, I hope to escape him
 before two days are past,
 so that I need care for his summons no more 3150 than he does for mine.'
 She said: 'Reynaert, what does this mean?'
 Reynaert said: 'Lady, I shall tell you.
 I can think of a wilderness
 with high bushes and heather, 3155 and where there is no lack of suitable resting places and food.
 Fowls and partridges live there and all kinds of small birds.

been deceived (3140-50 and cf. 1372-84, 2534-37, 3319-20, 3420-24, 3447-51). That is why Reynaert will depart for a new wilderness with his family, out of reach of Nobel's court (cf. 3317-29).

3145-46 It concerns the constituent parts of a gallows.

3152-64 The fox presents the landscape to his wife as a paradise. This holds true only from a predator's perspective, for other animals risk their lives there. For the world of the court such a landscape is a locus terribilis (cf. the note to 2574-93).

- Wildi doen, vrouwe Ermeline, 3160 dat ghi gaen wilt met mi daer?
 Wi moghen daer wonen VII jaer (willen wi), wandelen onder die scade ende hebben daer groete ghenade,
 eer wi worden daer bespied.
 3165 Al seidic meer, in loghe niet.'
 'Ay, Reynaert,' sprac vrouwe Hermeline,
 'dit dinct mi wesen eene pine die algader ware verloren.
 Nu hebdi dit lant verzworen 3170 in te wonen nemmermee, eer ghi comt overzee;
 ende hebt palster ende scerpe ontfaen.'
 Reynaert andwoerde vele saen: [211va]
 'So meer ghezworen, so meer verloren.
 3175 Mi seide een goet man hier tevoren
 in rade dat hi mi riet:
bedwongene trauwe ne diedet niet.
 Al vuldade ic dese vaert,
 en holpe mi niet,' sprac Reynaert.
 3180 'In waers een ey niet te bat.
 Ic hebbe den coninc eenen scat
 belovet die mi es onghereet, ende als hi des de waerheit weet
 ende hi bi mi es bedroghen, 3185 dat ic hem al hebbe gheloghen,
 so sal hi mi haten vele meere
 dan hi noint dede eere.
 Daerbi peinsic in minen moet:
 dat varen es mi also goet 3190 alse dit bliven,' sprac Reynaert.
 'Ende Godsat hebbe mijn rode baert,
 ghedoe hoe ic ghedoe,
 of mi troestet mee daertoe
 no die cater no die das, 3195 no Bruun, die na mijn oem was,

3180 The literal meaning of ey is 'egg'.

Will you agree, Lady Hermeline, 3160 to go there with me?
 We can live there for seven years,
 if we like, walk in the shadow
 and do very well there,
 before we would be found out.
 3165 If I said more about it, I would not lie.'
 'Oh, Reynaert,' Lady Hermeline said,
 'this seems to me
 altogether a waste of effort.
 You have just forsworn this land, 3170 never to live in it again,
 until you return from the Holy Land,
 and you have received the staff and scrip.'
 Reynaert answered at once:
 'The more you swear, the more you lose.
 3175 A wise man once told me
 when he gave me some advice:
 under duress a promise means nothing.
 If I were to accomplish this journey,
 it would not help me,' said Reynaert.
 3180 'It would not benefit me one bit.
 I have promised the king a treasure
 which I do not possess,
 and once he knows the truth about it and how he has been deceived by me, 3185 and that I have told him a pack of lies,
 he will hate me far more than he ever did before.
 That is why I think that going away will benefit me as much 3190 as staying,' said Reynaert.
 'And may my red beard be damned,
 whatever my circumstances,
 if I should ever be persuaded again
 by the cat or the badger 3195 or by dear uncle Bruun,

- no dor ghewin no dor scade,
dat ic in sconinx ghenade
ne comme, dat ic leve lancst!
Ic hebbe leden so meneghen anxt.’
3200 So zeere balch die ram Belijn dat Cuaert, die gheselle zijn,
in dat hol so langhe merrede.
Hi riep als die hem zeere errede:
‘Cuaert, lates den duvel wouden!
3205 Hoe langhe sal hu daer Reynaert houden?
Twi ne comdi huut ende laet ons gaen?’
Alse Reynaert dit hadde verstaen, doe ghinc hi hute tote Beline
ende sprac al stillekine:
3210 ‘Ay heere, twi so belghedi?
Al sprac Cuwaert jeghen mi
ende jeghen ziere moyen,
waeromme mach hu dus vernoyen?
Cuaert dede mi verstaen,
3215 ghi moghet wel sachte voeren gaen, [211vb]
ne wildi hier niet langher zijn.
Hi moet hier merren een lettelkijn met siere moyen Hermelinen ende met haren welpkinen, 3220 die seere weenen ende mesbaren
omdat ic hem sal ontfaren.’
Belin sprac: ‘Nu secht mi,
heere Reynaert, wat hebdi
Cuaerde te leede ghedaen?
3225 Also als ic conste verstaen,
so riep hi arde hulpe up mi.’
Reynaert sprac: ‘Wat sechdi?
Belin, God moete hu beraden!
Ic segghe hu wat wi doe daden.
3230 Doe ic in huus gheganghen quam
ende Ermeline an mi vernam dat ic wilde varen overzee, ten eersten wart haer so wee dat so langhe in ommacht lach.

or by the prospect of profit or loss to surrender myself to the king's mercy, as long as I live!
 I have suffered so many fears.'

- 3200 The ram Belin became very angry that Cuwaert, his companion, tarried so long in that hole.
 Very annoyed, he shouted:
 'Cuwaert, let the devil see to it!
 3205 How long is Reynaert going to keep you there?
 Why don't you come out so we can go?'
 When Reynaert had heard this,
 he went outside to Belin
 and said softly:
 3210 'Ah, lord, why are you annoyed?
 If Cuwaert spoke with me
 and with his aunt,
 why should that irritate you so?
 Cuwaert gave me to understand 3215 that you may go ahead slowly,
 if you no longer wish to stay here.
 He has to remain here just a little while longer with his aunt Hermeline
 and with her cubs,
 3220 who are weeping and wailing loudly
 because I shall leave them.'
 Belin said: 'Now tell me,
 Lord Reynaert, what wrong have you done to Cuwaert?
 3225 In so far as I could hear it,
 he called me urgently to come to his rescue.'
 Reynaert said: 'What are you saying?
 Belin, may God help you!
 I shall tell you what we were doing then.
 3230 As I entered my house and Hermeline heard from me that I intended to go to the Holy Land,
 she was at once so overcome
 that she lay unconscious for a long time.

- 3235 Ende alse Cuaert dat ghesach, doe riep hi: "Bellijn, helet vry,
com hare, ende helpt mi
miere moyen laven; so es in ommacht!"
Dat riep hi met groeter cracht.
- 3240 Dit waren die woerde ende niet hel.'
'Entrauwen, ic verstont oec wel
dat Cuaert dreef groet mesbare.
Ic waende hem yet mesvallen ware.'
Reynaert sprac: 'Belin, neent niet.
- 3245 Mi ware liever mesquame yet
minen kindren of minen wive
dan mijns neven Cuwaerts live.' Reynaert sprac: 'Vernaemdi yet
dat mi de coninc ghistren hiet
- 3250 voer arde vele hoeghe liede,
als ic huten lande sciede,
dat ic hem een paer lettren screve?
Suldijt hem draghen, Belin neve?
Het es ghescreven ende al ghereet.'
- 3255 Belin sprac: 'Ende ic ne weet.
Reynaert, wistic hu ghedichte
dat ghetrauwe ware, ghi mochtet lichte [212ra]
ghebidden dat ict den coninc droughe, haddic eeneghe dinc
- 3260 daer icse mochte in steken.'
Reynaert sprac: 'Hu ne sal niet ghebreken.
Eer des coninx lettren hier bleven,
ic soude hu dese scerpe eer gheven,
heere Belin, die ic draghe
- 3265 ende hanghense an huwe craghe
ende des conincs lettren daerin.
Ghi sulter af hebben groet ghewin,
des conincs danc ende groet eere.
Ghi sult den coninc minen heere
- 3270 harde willecomme zijn.'
Dit loofde mijn heere Belijn.
Reynaert ghinc in die aghedochte
ende keerde weder ende brochte

- 3235 And when Cuwaert saw this,
 he called: "Belin, noble hero,
 come here and help me
 rouse my aunt. She has fainted!"
 That is what he shouted as loudly as he could.
 3240 These were his words and nothing else.'
 – 'Truly, I clearly also heard Cuwaert wailing loudly.
 I thought something awful had happened to him.'
 Reynaert said: 'Belin, no, certainly not.
 3245 I would sooner that something happened to my children or to my wife
 than to my cousin Cuwaert's life.'
 Reynaert said: 'Did you happen to hear that the king asked me yesterday 3250 in the presence of very many nobles to write him a letter
 when I left the country?
 Would you take it to him, cousin Belin?
 It has been written and is quite finished.'
 3255 Belin said: 'I don't really know.
 Reynaert, if I knew that your writing was trustworthy, you would not need to press me to take it to the king,
 if I had something 3260 to put it in.'
 Reynaert said: 'You will lack for nothing.
 Rather than that the letter to the king should stay here, I would give you this scrip,
 Lord Belin, that I wear, 3265 and hang it round your neck,
 with the letter to the king in it.
 You will reap great benefit from it,
 the king's gratitude and much honour.
 You will be most welcome
 3270 with my lord the king.'
 This my Lord Belin promised to do.
 Reynaert went back into his hole and returned and brought

- sinen vrient Beline jeghen

ende hinc bi sinen quaden treken

Ende seide hem dat die lettren staken

3290 Die coninc souts hem weten danc.
Dat hoerde Belin ende spranc

Doe sprac Belin: 'Reynaert heere,

Hierna sprac Belin: 'Reynaert,

'Neen hi,' sprac Reynaert, 'hi sal hu saen

Hi ne hevet noch negheene stade.
Nu gaet voren met ghemake.

his friend Belin 3275 Cuwaert's head,
 inserted into the scrip,
 and hung, evil minded as ever,
 the scrip round Belin's neck
 and strongly impressed upon him 3280 that he should not look at the letter
 if he wished to befriend the king.
 And he told him that the letter
 had been put deep down in the scrip 3285 and if he wanted to do well and if he loved his lord the king,
 then he had to say that this letter
 had been written by himself alone
 and that it had been his idea.
 3290 The king would be very grateful to him.
 Belin heard this and jumped up from the place where he stood more than half a foot,
 so glad was he about this affair
 3295 that later turned out so badly for him!
 Then Belin said: 'Lord Reynaert,
 now I am certain that you honour
 me and the members of the court.
 I shall be praised highly 3300 when it becomes known that I can write with fine and plain words,
 even though I cannot really.
 It is often said: many acquire great honour – bestowed on them by God – 3305 through skills they barely master.'
 Then Belin said: 'Reynaert,
 what do you advise? Should Cuwaert return with me to court?'
 'No,' said Reynaert, 'he will speedily 3310 follow by the same route.
 He hasn't got time for it yet.
 Now go ahead and take it slowly.

- Ic sal Cuaerde sulke sake
ontdecken, die noch es verholen.’
3315 ‘Reynaert, so blivet Gode volen,’ sprac Belin ende dede hem up de vaert.
Nu hoert wat hi doet, Reynaert!
Hi keerde in sine haghedochte
ende sprac: ‘Hier naect ons gherochte, 3320 bliven wi hier, ende grote pine.
Ghereet hu, vrouwe Hermeline,
ende mine kindre also algader.
Volghet mi; ic bem hu vader.
Ende pinen wi ons dat wi ontfaren.’
3325 Doe ne was daer gheen langher sparen.
Si daden hem alle up die vaert:
Ermeline ende heere Reynaert
ende hare jonghe welpkine;
dese anevaerden die woestine.
3330 Nu hevet Belin die ram soe gheloepen dat hi quam te hove een lettelt na middach.
Als die coninc Belin ghesach,
die de scerpe wederbrochte 3335 daer Brune die beere so onsochte
tevoren omme was ghedaen,
doe sprac hi te Belin saen:
‘Heere Belin, wanen comedi?
Waer es Reynaert? Hoe comt dat hi 3340 dese scerpe niet met hem draghet?’
Belin sprac: ‘Coninc, ic maghet [212va]
hu segghen also ict weet.
Doe Reynaert al was ghereet
ende hi den casteel rumen soude, 3345 doe seide hi mi dat hi hu woude
een paer lettren, coninc vry,

3313-14 Reynaert's words are ambiguous. He states that he will reveal a secret to Cuwaert, but his words may also mean that he will reveal a secret to the king by means of the hare (i.e. that there is no treasure).

I shall make Cuwaert reveal something that as yet is hidden.'

3315 'Reynaert, may God keep you,'
said Belin and went on his way.

Now hear what Reynaert does!

He returned to his den
and said: 'Problems are in store for us 3320 if we stay here, and much misery.
Get you ready, Lady Hermeline,
and all my children, too.
Follow me, I am your father.
And let us make every effort to escape.'
3325 Then they did not delay any longer.
They all went on their way:
Hermeline and Lord Reynaert
and their young cubs;
they departed for the waste land.

3330 Now Belin the ram has made such good speed that he reached the court shortly after noon.
When the king saw Belin,
who returned the scrip 3335 for which Bruun the bear had earlier been maltreated so,
he said to Belin immediately:
'Lord Belin, where are you coming from?
Where is Reynaert? How come that he 3340 does not have this scrip with him?'
Belin said: 'King, I shall tell it you as I understand it.

When Reynaert was quite ready and was about to leave his fortress, 3345 he told me that he wanted to send you, noble king, a letter and then he asked me to deliver it out of affection for you.

Dese lettren dichte ic hem,

3360 Dese lettren dichte ic bi minen rade,

Doe hiet hem die coninc gheven

Dat was hi die ant werc 3365 bet conste dan yement die daer was.
Botsaert plach emmer dat hi las die lettren die te hove quamen.
Bruneel ende hi die namen
die scerpe van den halse Belijns, 3370 die bi der dompheit zijns
hiertoe hadde gheseit so verre
dat hi snieme sal werden erre.
Die scerpe ontfinc Botsaert de clerc.
Doe moeste bliken Reynaerts werc, 3375 alse hi dat hoeft voerttrac,
Botsaert, ende sach dat:
‘Helpe, wat lettren zijn dit?
Heere coninc, bi miere wit,
dit es dat hoeft van Cuaerde!
3380 O wach, dat ghi noint Reynaerde, coninc, ghetrauwet so verre!’
Doe mochte men drouve sien ende erre
dien coninc entie coninghinne.

3362-68 It is not clear what kind of animals Botsaert the clerk and Bruneel are supposed to be. Were these characters familiar to Willem’s public? It has been suggested that Botsaert might be a monkey or a boar; Bruneel is said to have been an ass.

I declared that for your sake I would gladly 3350 carry more than seven letters.
 Then Reynaert was unable to find anything
 in which I might carry the letter.
 He brought me this scrip
 with the letter put inside it.
 3355 King, you never heard speak of a better writer than I am.
 This letter I wrote for him,
 whatever may befall me.
 This letter I composed to the best of my ability,
 3360 thus drawn up and put in writing.’
 Then the king ordered him to give the letter to Botsaert his clerk.
 He was better at that job
 than anyone who was present there.
 3365 Botsaert always used to read the letters that arrived at court.
 Bruneel and he lifted
 the scrip from around Belin’s neck,
 who, in his stupidity, 3370 had been saying so much that he will soon regret it.
 Botsaert the clerk received the scrip.
 Then Reynaert’s doing had to come to light,
 as soon as Botsaert drew out 3375 the head and saw it:
 ‘Help, what kind of a letter is this?
 Lord King, by my faith,
 this is Cuwaert’s head!
 Ah, woe, king, that you ever 3380 put so much trust in Reynaert!’
 Then the king and queen
 could be seen to be sad and angry.
 The king stood there deeply affected

3372-80 Earlier in the story Reynaert had mocked and teased his victims Bruun, Tybeert and Haersint verbally. The lion, however, is made a fool of in a non-verbal manner by Reynaert when Cuwaert’s head is pulled from the bag.

3412-21 Nobel has wronged his mightiest vassals. According to Fyrapeel this calls for a reconciliation (3412). However, in the leopard's cynical mental world this does not apply to

- and hung his head.
 3385 After a long time he lifted it again and began to raise the most terrifying sound
 that any animal was ever heard to make.
 The animals there were afraid.
- 3390 Then forward sprang Fyrapeel, the leopard. He was a distant relative of the king; he was allowed to do so.
 He said: 'Lord King Lion,
 why are you making such a row?
 3395 You are letting yourself go in a way
 as if the queen had died.
 Behave properly and sensibly and modify your distress somewhat.'
 The king said: 'Lord Fyrapeel, 3400 I have been so terribly misled by a scoundrel
 that I am beside myself,
 and I have been trapped by a trick
 so that I now have every reason to hate myself and I have lost my honour.
- 3405 A false pilgrim robbed me
 of those who were my friends before,
 bold Lord Bruun and Lord Ysingrijn.
 It make me very sad at heart
 that it will cost me my honour 3410 and my life, and rightly so!'
 Then Fyrapeel spoke again:
 'Where wrong has been done, peace must be sought.
 The wolf and the bear will be sent for,
 as will Lady Haersint 3415 and they will straightaway be compensated for the wrong done to them and for the distress and the pain they suffered by offering them the ram Belin, since he has admitted himself that he betrayed Cuwaert.

3423 The last line in the Dyck manuscript agrees with line 3423 in the redaction of the Comburg codex. This is one reason why the end of the Comburg redaction has been considered to be not original. However, this opinion now seems untenable. It is more likely that the last lines of the original poem are lacking from the Dyck redaction. See also the note to 3461-69.

3439-46 The leopard tries to reconcile the lion with the wolf and the bear by surrendering the ram and all its relatives to them for all eternity. This is reminiscent of the Messianic peace described in the Book of Isaiah (11, 6-7): ‘And the wolf shall dwell with the lamb: and the leopard shall lie down with the kid: and the calf and the lion, and the sheep shall abide together, and a little child shall lead them. And the calf and the bear shall feed: their young ones shall rest together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.’ However, the four predators

- 3420 He has done wrong, he will pay for it.
 And next we shall all go after Reynaert and catch him and hang him by the throat without a trial, it's lawful!'
- 3425 Then the king answered to this:
 'Well, Lord Fyrapeel,
 if this could be done, then part of the distress that I suffer would be alleviated.'
 Fyrapeel said: 'Lord, certainly.
 I shall go and effect the reconciliation.'
- 3430 Then brave Fyrapeel
 went to where he found the captives.
 I assume that he freed them first!
 And then he said: 'You lords, both of you,
 I bring you peace and safe conduct.'
- 3435 My lord the king greets you and now deeply regrets
 the harm that he has done you.
 He offers to recompense you, if you will agree,
 whatever anyone else may think.
- 3440 He wants to give you Belin the ram and all Lord Belin's relatives from now until Doomsday.
 In the field or in the woods,
 they will all be at your disposal
- 3445 and you may kill them as much as you like.
 The king especially wants you to know this:
 that you may, without committing any crime,
 harm and torment Reynaert

that are peaceful in Isaiah, agree in Willem's poem that they are justified in tearing apart the ram and his descendants till kingdom come. This is a cynical reversal, which indicates that in Nobel's world evil will reign for ever. At the leopard's proposal the king is reconciled with his highest vassals by infringing the rights of other vassals permanently. This spells the end of Nobel's feudal order (see pp. 25-27). Possibly there is another biblical motif which resonates here. Cuwaert and Belin function as the two goats from the Book of Leviticus, which are sacrificed on the day of atonement by the priest of the temple for the sins of the Jewish people. The first (Cuwaert) is killed in the temple (Manpertuus). The second, the actual scapegoat (Belin), is sent, laden with the iniquities of the people, into the wilderness to perish there (Lev. 16, 20-23).

- 3450 Reynaerde moghet toren ende quaet

waer so ghise moghet belaghen.
Dese twee groete vriheden

Ende hierbinnen wilt die coninc rike

Hi ne wille oec bi sinen sculde

3460 Dit biedt hu de coninc lyoen.
Dit neemt ende leeft met ghenaden.
Bi Gode, ic dart hu wel raden!’
I singrijn sprac toten beere:
‘Wat sechdire toe, Brune heere?’
3465 – ‘Ic hebbe liever in de rijssere

Laet ons toten coninc gaen
Ende sinen pays daer ontfaen.’ [213rb]
Met Fyrapeel dat si ghinghen
Ende maecten pays van allen dinghen.

3461-69 The acrostichon BI WILLEME agrees with the information in the first line of the poem: its author is Willem. This is an argument in favour of the view that the end of the poem in the Comburg redaction is original.

3450 and all his relatives,
 wherever you can waylay them.
 These two great liberties
 does the king wish to bestow on you today to be at your free disposal for all eternity.
 3455 And in connection with this the mighty king wants you to do homage to him.
 He will never again
 knowingly wrong you.
 This is what King Lion offers you.
 3460 Accept it, and you will live in his favour.
 By God, I would certainly recommend it!
 Y singrijn said to the bear:
 ‘What do you say, Lord Bruun?’
 – ‘I prefer lying in the bushes to 3465 Lying here, clapped in irons.
 Let us go to the king and Enter into his peace.’
 Moving along with Fyrapeel, they Ended by making peace all round.

Editorial principles

This edition of Van den vos Reynaerde is based on the redaction in the Comburg manuscript (Stuttgart, Württembergische Landesbibliothek, Cod. poet. et phil. 2^o 22). This codex consists of six parts; Van den vos Reynaerde is found in the fourth. It was written by scribe E, and runs from line 22, halfway down folio 192va, to line 3 on folio 213rb. Wherever a new column begins in the manuscript, a folio and column number is stated in the right hand margin of the edited Middle Dutch text.

There are two reasons why the Comburg redaction was preferred to the redaction in the Dyck manuscript (Münster, Universitätsbibliothek, Ms. N.R. 381), even though the latter probably predates Comburg by more than half a century (see p. 34). First, the Dyck redaction is a copy of a Flemish exemplar, but written by a scribe from the county of Holland. This has resulted in many inconsistencies in word forms and spelling. By contrast the Comburg redaction is a regular Flemish copy in which the original word forms and spelling have been kept relatively intact (cf. Muller 1917, p. 47). A second reason is that the younger Comburg redaction appears to have preserved the original ending – including the acrostic BI WILLEME (lines 3461-69) – whereas Dyck probably has an abbreviated version of the conclusion (cf. Bouwman 1991, pp. 369-371, Van Daele 1996).

A colour facsimile, published by Janssens [a.o.] 1991, was used for the transcription. Here a critical edition of the Comburg text is presented, which implies a certain amount of editorial intervention. All modifications are accounted for below.

1. All abbreviations have been silently expanded. For a discussion of the abbreviation marks used by scribe E, see Brinkman & Schenkel 1997, pp. 105-6.
2. No punctuation has been used in the manuscript. In the edited text modern punctuation marks have been added.
3. Sentences, proper names and the names of deities begin with a capital letter in the edited text. Roman numerals have also been rendered in capitals, but without the points that are used in the manuscript before and after the number. All capital letters were added by the editors. The rubricated capitals at the beginning of every line have not been indicated in the edited text. Comburg scribe E structured his text by using initials and paragraph signs in red paint; in the edited text these have also been ignored. Painted initials (one line in height) are found in lines 41, 61, 135, 149, 177, 233, 263, 283, 315, 361, 421, 441, 465, 497, 547, 575, 601, 627, 647, 707, 739, 778, 805, 837, 877, 909, 929, 961, 1015, 1043, 1142, 1233, 1285, 1335, 1359, 1393, 1427, 1533, 1567, 1603, 1691, 1753, 1811, 1847, 1868, 1886, 1918, 1966, 1985, 2041, 2061, 2139, 2179, 2227, 2278, 2389, 2423, 2447, 2473, 2491, 2549, 2565, 2617, 2717, 2751, 2796, 2842, 2890, 2926, 2952, 2976, 3012, 3074, 3090, 3124, 3152, 3166, 3200, 3248, 3272, 3296, 3330, 3374, 3426. The rubricated capitals directly following the painted initials have similarly been ignored, except in lines 135, 647 and 2926, where VV has been rendered as W. The same procedure has been applied to the painted initial V (3 lines in height) and rubricated capital V in line 1. Paragraph signs are found at the beginning of lines 126, 170, 203, 205, 247, 375, 562, 893, 1054, 1109, 2209, 2500, 2806, 3390.

4. The story has been subdivided by the editors into seven episodes: Prologue, King Noble Holds Court, First Summons, Second Summons, Third Summons, Conviction and Reconciliation, Revenge and Flight. In the edition these divisions are marked by white lines not found in the manuscript.
5. The spelling of u/v and i/j has been adapted in accordance with modern usage. No distinction has been made between the different forms of r and s.
6. For the sake of clarity several words that were written as separate forms in the manuscript have been contracted in the edition, or, conversely, words written as compounds in the manuscript have been separated in the edition. Our guide here has been the Middelnederlandsch handwoordenboek (Verdam 1932). The contractions concern combinations of a preposition and a verb (as in af bernen, 'burn off'), compound adverbs (daer na, hier omme) and conjunctions (om dat) as well as compound nouns (cloester bier). Words have been separated when personal pronouns or particles have been joined on to preceding words without resulting in clisis, reduction or assimilation (see pp. 261-262). This is the case particularly when pronouns are followed by a negative particle (ghine), when followed by the first person singular of the past tense of a number of strong verbs (as in lietic, hietic) and in combinations with a conjunction (datsi, datso). The following cases, arranged alphabetically, have been modified: achter hende (1932), achter waert (1746), af bernen (1502), af doen (2894), af ghebeten (289), af ghedaen (949), af ghesleghen (1730), af vloyde (2889), al daer (2100, 2250, 2406, 2513, 2629, 2668, 2696), al daert (1539), al gader (1272, 1929, 2116, 2414, 2457, 2543, 2571, 2884, 3168, 3322), al gadre (1141), al in een (1251), alden ghenen (2428), aldus ghedanen (3069), alle gader (1003, 1451, 2216, 2227, 2503), alle gadre (1236), alre best (468), alre beste (1534), alre meest (2192), alre mintsten (2126), alre naest (2605), alre scaerpst (784), alsi (3302), alsmen (3300), alsomen (1341), alte gader (2439), alte hant (539), an draghen (2907), ander sins (84), ane slaen (442), ane vaerden (3329), bander zijde (1826), beere huut (926), biden (688, 942), bider (1705, 2654g), bouc stave (459),

7. In lines where the manuscript text does not make sense or contradicts other story elements, the edited text indicates that corrections have been made (printed in italics). All such instances are accounted for separately below, briefly stating reasons, insofar as possible, why a reading is incorrect, but also how it occurred during the transmission of the text. It is inevitable that a scribe should make mistakes: in the process of reading the manuscript he was copying (his exemplar); when recalling a passage just read (the dictée intérieure); during the writing process itself; and when searching the exemplar for the last word or line copied. The following errors are connected with these actions: reading errors (misreading of letters, abbreviations, words, word divisions); optical contamination, i.e. influence of one or more words from a previous or following line, a gloss etc.; memory errors; scribal errors (resulting in omitted or repeated letters, misspellings etc.); and continuation errors (homæoteleuton or eyeskip, resulting either in omission or repetition). For a survey of these 'mechanical' errors see Vinaver 1939 and Greetham 1994 and in particular Duinhoven 1975 (in Dutch). The method of textual criticism followed here does not aim to present a reconstruction of the thirteenth-century original; rather, it aspires to correct the obvious errors in the Comburg redaction, with the help of the variants in the sources predating 1500. In those cases where Comburg (A) presents an intelligible reading, nothing has been changed, even though some redactions may have an older reading. The sources have been indicated by the sigla commonly used in Reynaert research (see pp. 34-36). Triple rhyme and assonance did not lead to critical adaptation of the text, nor did impure rhyme; however, orphan rhyme did (1049, 1966, 2759). The spelling of words and lines derived from other sources were not modified to fit the Comburg redaction, nor were they adapted in any other way. All added lines, twenty-six in total, are supplementary to the line numbering based on Comburg (1-3469), and are marked as a, b, c etc. Thus consulting the synoptic edition of the Reynaert sources published by Hellinga (1952) can present no difficulties. In the list of corrections a number of typographical signs are used:

- * hypothetical word or form of which the existence is inferred
- > becomes
- < from

- 1 Madocke: as in F, (B) – A vele bouke (on erasure), probably the correction of the story title Madocke, by ca. 1400 almost certainly obscure.
- 6 Arnout: as in F – A willem. The person named in this line is not the author of Van den vos Reynaerde, but a predecessor, possibly a French poet of a Renart story (cf. Bouwman 1991, pp. 44-47).
- 7 dede: as in F, (B) – A van reynaerde, possibly an explanatory gloss on vijte (in A's exemplar), taken as a correction of dede (cf. Lulofs 1983, p. 297).
- 238 makeden – A reads makedent, scribal error caused by -t in zijt.
- 258 over recht – A has Onrecht; probably erroneous reading of ou' recht*; cf. F Mit rechte and B Mit recht.
- 303 drouch: cf. F, B (Droech) – A Droucht, scribal error.
- 305 Dat: cf. F (Dit), B (Die) – A Daer, possibly reading error of dat > dar*. There are four, not six, children (cf. lines 412-13).
- 320 minen kinderen: as in F, (B) – A mine sustren. Canticleer, the father, is speaking here.
- 332 tenen: as in F, (L) – A te dien, resulting from the substitution of a numeral (regarded as an indefinite article) by a definite article.
- 344 Reynaert: as in F, B – A Want reynaert. A conjunction in combination with ende (245) is ungrammatical. For an alternative explanation (want is an intrusive gloss on 343, meaning 'a wall made of wattle and daub') see Lulofs 1983, p. 299.
- 353 Noch ontquam: cf. F Nochtan quam .../ Dane, B Nochtant ontquam and L Sed tamen euasit – A Nochtan quam, resulting from reading error (with incorrect word division) Nochontquam* > Nochont quam*.
- 378 stolen: as in F – A scole, resulting from reading error t > c.
- 410 nu: A has mi, reading error, possibly influenced by mindre (optical contamination).
- 436 best: as in F – A ons best. Because of the direct object dese moort in line 437, wreken cannot be a reflexive verb.
- 450 vygelye: singular on account of finite verb was – A vygelyen.
- 454 slecht was: A reads die slecht was, which obstructs the necessary link between lines 454 and 456 (cf. also F 440-41).

- 456-55 Order of the lines by analogy with F, on account of the necessary link between lines 455 and 457 – A probably has an uncorrected continuation error here.
- 457 deden: cf. F – A dede (singular), adapted by the scribe on account of the transposed lines. He took Die saerc for the subject, instead of the plural form Die letteren.
- 502 Dort doncker: cf. F Durt donkerste, B Door dat doncker, L per opaca ruit nomorum vicinaque silue – A Dor den keer, a result of a reading error (with erroneous word division; cf. Lulofs 1983, p. 301).
- 535 voer in: cf. F vore in and L iacet in porta; line 540 implies that the fox already lay partly in his den – A voer.
- 579 ende: cf. F, B – A ende icse, subclause with contraction, taken by the scribe as a defective main clause and adapted accordingly.
- 648 was, eist waer: cf. B ist wair dat men my seit – A waer was eist.
- 786 verhoernden cloet: F, cf. L contum cornutum – A verboerden cloet. Possible reading error and understood as raised (high).
- 802 Abstale: cf. F Absdale – A Abscale, resulting from reading error of t > c*.
- 812 ghedichte: as in F, cf. B dicke – A ghestichte, result of a reading error?
- 848 Upt ouver: cf. F Op den oeuer – A Upt touver may be the result of dittography (caused by ‘dictee intérieure’: uptouver); cf. Muller 1944, p. 142 (l. 846).
- 915 nu: as in F, (B) – A in, reading error.
- 944 draghet: as in F, (B) – A draghen, reading error or memory lapse.
- 993 dier: as in F, B – A diet, reading error r > t.
- 996 hoere: cf. F luchter ore, L Aurem me leuam; singular on account of line 745 – A hoeren.
- 1004 ende rieden: as in F – A doe rieden si, resulting from optical contamination caused by line 1006.
- 1049a keer herwaert dinen vlogel: as in B, (F, L) – In A this line is missing as a result of a continuation error.
- 1088 vraet: as in F, B – A braet, reading error of v > b.
- 1104 dages: as in F, (B), as opposed to the meeting at night in line 1107 – A daer.
- 1276 In: as in F – A int, scribal error, possibly as the result of incorrectly remembered in sleets*.
- 1390 quite: cf. B quijt – A qijite, scribal error.
- 1415 Rossel, een: cf. F roseel een, L roscellus – A rollel ende, reading error of long s > l and possibly also of ene(n) > en(de)*.
- 1433 scouwet: as in F – A scone wel, reading error (with erroneous word division).
- 1434-37 Cf. F, (B, L) – Continuation error in A: as a result of eyeskip from van zorghen (1434) and van sonden (1434c), at the beginning of the last line copied, three lines have been left out. In order to supplement the resulting orphan rhyme, an extra line was invented: A 1436 Nu hoert mine redene saen (cf. Muller 1917, p. 241 and Lulofs 1983, p. 304).

- 1451 mire mesdaet: as in F – A minen mesdaden, a result of memory lapse (influenced by the previous couplet).
- 1467 strec: as in F – A net, a result of a memory lapse? contradicts lines 1173, 1298 etc.
- 1506 niene: as in F – A mi niet.
- 1509 Bloys: as in D, (F) – A vimbloys, A van vimbloys may be the result of dittography (caused by optical contamination): van van bloys*.
- 1527 sat: as in F, B (L) – lacking in A; as a result the contrast with ongherich (1526) remains implicit.
- 1540 vanc: as in F, (B) – A vant, reading error of c > t.
- 1543 mijn: as in F, B, (L) – A mijns, scribal error (or relict of mijns selves?*; cf. L propria ... domo).
- 1592 dien: A diene, optical contamination caused by the first word in line 1593.
- 1635 hortene: as in F, (B) – A hoendene, influenced by hoenen in line 1634 (optical contamination); cf. also Bouwman 1991, p. 196-97.
- 1642 vyergat: cf. F hemel gat, D valdore gat – A vyuer gat, scribal error.
- 1737 verseert: as in J – A versmaet; was the scribe influenced by the four preceding rhymes here?
- 1743 die ic: as in F, B, (L) – A Dien, reading error: ic > n.
- 1748 die si tevoren hadden gelaten: as in F, B – A doe began hem drouue ghelaten, see below under 1750-49.
- 1750-49 Order of the lines by analogy with F and B, also in view of the link with lines 1751-52 – When in the exemplar of A the original line 1748 was left out through a continuation error, an orphan rhyme and a defective link were the result. These problems were solved by the scribe who transposed lines 1750 and 1749, and invented a new line (1748), an amplification of line 1749.
- 1779 souden: as in F, B, D; plural (cf. line 1778) – A soude.
- 1788 nu: as in F – A niet, reading error, *nu > nz = n(iet).
- 1822a-d In F, (B) – Continuation error in A as a result of eyeskip. From noch (in 1822 and 1822d), the first word of the line copied last, the scribe missed four lines (all clearly dependent on lines from the Old French source; cf. Muller 1917, p. 269, and Bouwman 1991, p. 491).
- 1836 sake: as in B (F); singular (cf. zi) – A saken.
- 1855 Fortadent: cf. F Foret adent – A Forcondet. In neither of the two redactions the significance of the boar's name (Strong-with-the-tooth, Strongtooth) was understood; see for the conjecture Bouwman 1991, pp. 224-25.
- 1856 Tiselijn: as in F – A tyocelijn, scribal error.
- 1860 wesel, mijn: as in F, (B, D, L) – A weline die.
- 1871a-b orconde denghenen die dat horden! / Soudic die tale entie worden: as in F, with an alteration according to P (F Orconden gingen); cf. also L – In A the two lines are missing, making lines 1872-73 unintelligible (cf. Bouwman 1991, p. 228).

1966a die Reynaerde hadden harde leit: as in F – in A this line is missing, probably as the result of a continuation error.

2011 nu: A mi, incompatible with the intransitive verb sparen; caused by reading error.

2075 mammen: as in F, B – A mannen, reading error, probably as result of abbreviated form mañen* (preserved in F and B).

2097 Belsele: as in F – A besele scribal error (cf. Muller 1944, p. 110 and Van Daele 1994, p. 46 and 466, note 758).

2156 nu: A mi, as a second direct object (beside ons) incompatible with the verb secht; result of reading error.

2207 eene: cf. F – A eeene, scribal error (dittography).

2229 bedragen: as in F, B – A bedrieghen, incompatible with the prepositional construction Met verradenessen. The scribe misread bedragen, i.e. ‘accuse’ or interpreted it as (a form of) bedriegen.

2230 maghen: cf. F, B – A maghen lieghen. A new rhyme word has been added to fit the change of rhyme in line 2229.

2241 Hermeliken: cf. F hermerikes – A heymeliken, in view of A 2564 ermelinc reading error of hermeliken*.

2243 Doe: cf. B, P – A, F Die, reading error; the line was regarded as an adjectival clause with stat (2242).

2270a-d The four lines, copied from F, do not feature in A, but cannot be missed. The direct object Dat of weder segghen (2273), i.e. ‘reject’, by the king’s relatives, cannot refer to the secret plot to murder the king in lines 2268-69, in which they are not involved. It can only refer to what follows publicly: Bruun’s proclamation as king (cf. Bouwman 1991, pp. 276-78).

2311 verslant: as in F, B – A verslanc, reading error: t > c.

2334 kende den coninc: as in F, B (L), i.e. unlike Reynaert’s experiences with Bruun (2329-30) – A kennen so, possibly a reading error of kendeden co.* > kenden so*.

2342 ghedoghede: cf. F, B – A ende ghedoghede, the conjunction shows that the noun zorghe was regarded as a finite verb (and grote as an adjunct with herte).

2392 vote hadden: cf. F, (B) voete – A vore hadde; vore reading error of vote*.

2403 gheraecter: cf. F – A gheraecte.

2433 brieve: as in F, B – A baniere, hardly compatible with the secrecy expressed in lines 2425-27.

2434 dieve: as in F, B – A diere, sounds odd from the mouth of a fox.

2510 hi al mine sculde: as in F, (B, L) – A bruun alle mine onsculde, makes no sense. Possibly a gloss reminiscent of lines 594, 606.

2526 argertieren: A erroneously reads argentieren.

- 2537 belanc: as in F – A belanct, scribal error caused by sullent.
- 2592 elwaer: as in F, (E) – A daer waert, possibly a reading error of el waer* > d' waer*. However, this adverb of direction is incompatible with the verb zijn ('to be').
- 2593 bi: as in F, E – A hi, reading error: b > h.
- 2594 ghehidet: as in F, E – A ghehidelt, scribal error.
- 2628 wane: as in F – A wanen, corrupt.
- 2645 voer den: as in F, (E, B) – A voert, does not make sense.
- 2653-55 Lines a-h have been supplemented from F – Continuation error in A: by eyeskip from vrouwen (in lines 2654 and 2654h), the final word of the line last copied, eight lines were lost in a preliminary phase of A. In a subsequent scribal phase the surrounding lines have been adjusted. 2653 manic: as in F, E, (B) – A maent hi. 2654 ver Genten: as in F, (E) – A zijt sculdich. 2655 den coninc: cf. F – A die ic den coninc. Cf. Bouwman 1991, pp. 290-93.
- 2660 Hulsterloe: as in F, (B, E) and cf. line 2575 – A hulst ter loe.
- 2678 vor: as in E, F, (B) – A wee, does not make sense.
- 2679 scone rijme: cf. B, (E), (L) – A huwen sone rijne, reading error.
- 2696 berke: as in E, (B), (L), and cf. lines 2601-07 – A burne.
- 2734 tebannen: cf. F gedaen te banne – A wart te bannen, before the past participle the finite verb from line 2732 is repeated (because of the subclause having main clause word order?).
- 2759a die hi te recht wel mochte mynnen: as in B – in A, a line is missing. More attractive and probably more original than A 2759-67 is F 2731-35: Nv hort hoe hier sal beginnen / Die coninc spreken coninclike / Mine dire arm ende rike / Beyde luttel ende groet / Mine baroene ende mine genoet. (Now listen how here the king will begin to speak in kingly fashion: 'My animals poor and rich, both small and large, my barons and my equal.')
- 2796 Tyselijn: cf. F necelijn < tiecelijn*, (B, L), and cf. line 1856 – A cirlin.
- 2812 tes: cf. F, B (ten) – A des.
- 2829 coninc: as in F, B – A cominc, scribal error (dittography).
- 2866 onbaren: as in F – A ombeeren, does not rhyme with varen (2867).
- 2883 van: as in F, B – A ende.
- 2928-29 smaren: as in F, (B, L) – A snoeren, semantic doubling in relation to lines 2931-32. tevoren waren: as in F, (B) – A waren tevoren. As a result of a memory lapse, a transposition within the line occurred in the exemplar of A. The new rhyme word voren (and the information in lines 2931-32) caused the scribe of A to make the reading error (or correction?) smaren > snoeren.
- 2997 alsi wouden: as in F, (B) – A als hi woude.
- 3020 dor: as in E – A die, scribal error caused by Die (3019); optical contamination.
- 3101a-b Reynart sprac: 'Ic was gevaen, mar die coninc hi lijft mi gaen.': as in E, (B, L) – Continuation error in A (and F): as a result of eyeskip from ontgaen (3101) and gaen (3101b), the final word of the last line copied, the scribe skipped two lines (which are indispensable because of lines 3103-04).

3129 ase: as in F – A base, reading error for hase*.

3135 bat: as in E, F, (B) – A dancte, incomprehensible in combination with goets.

3177 bedwongene: as in F, B – A Bedi ne gheene, reading error (with incorrect word division) of bedwonghene*.

3236 Bellijn: as in F, B – A lude, is grammatically correct, but hardly fits the context: Cuwaert has called Belin's name (line 3122) and it is clear that the ram has heard him, as line 3226 shows. Reynaert tries to twist some of Cuwaert's words (cf. Lulofs 1983, p. 313).

3239 Dat: as in F, (B) – A Doe, reading error influenced by A 3236 Doe riep hi (optical contamination).

3245 liever mesquame: as in F, (B) – A leet mesquame hem, lines 3246-47 do not fit; the scribe did not read any further and began to 'correct' the text, writing leet for lieuer and added hem.

3296-3300 Belin / Reynaert / mi / mi / ic can: as in F, B, G, (L); on the basis of lines 3302-05 it must be Belin who is speaking, but in A the fox speaks. 3296 Belin: 'Reynaert – A reynaert belin. 3298 mi – A hu. 3299 mi – A hu. 3300 ic can – A ghi coont.

3325 daer: cf. (F) – A daer doe, caused by the beginning of the line Doe ne (added during the 'dictée intérieure').

3390 Fyrapeel: as in B, (F, L) – A Syrapeel, where f was taken for the (long) s. Also in lines 3399, 3411, 3426, 3429, 3431, 3468.

3421-20 Order of the lines by analogy of F, B and (L) – In A, line 3421 serves as the justification to persecute Reynaert, but the line functions better as an excuse for victimizing Belin (cf. Lulofs 1983, p. 314).

3439 soene: as in P, (B) – in A this direct object is missing.

3452 vriheden: as in B, P – A vreden, reading error or corruption due to 'dictée intérieure'.

3464 Ic: – A adds who is speaking: brune sprac ic (not necessary because of the direct address in line 3463).

3465 Ligghen dan hier: A reads Dan hier te ligghene (transposition within the line caused by a memory lapse?); in dysere: A reads int ysere (caused error during dictée intérieure?). Reconstruction of the acrostic according to Mrs H.A. De Vreese-Kroon (cf. Muller 1927, pp. 52-53).

Middle Dutch – A short introduction

Matthias Hüning & Ulrike Vogl

Middle Dutch is the term used for the language varieties spoken between approximately 1150 and 1500 in the territory covered nowadays by the Netherlands and Flanders, the part of modern Belgium, where Flemish – the southern variety of the Dutch spoken in the Netherlands – is spoken. At that time there was no standard variety of Dutch, ‘Middle Dutch’ does not, therefore, refer to one specific language: it is a collective term used to designate several dialects spoken over several centuries. This implies a huge variation in the grammatical structure, the pronunciation and the spelling of Middle Dutch. Middle Dutch thus consisted mainly of spoken varieties, but the surviving texts show that, during the Middle Ages, it was also increasingly used as a written language.

Contemporaries usually called their own language Dietsch or Duutsch – as in the beginning of Van den vos Reynaerde (4-5) – which means ‘the language of the people’ (lingua theodisca) as opposed to Latin or French, which were the dominant languages of writing, of administration and of the nobility, science, and the church at that time. While we have only a few text fragments in Old Dutch, a large number of Middle Dutch texts has survived. Van den vos Reynaerde is an early example of a literary text in Middle Dutch.

1 Middle Dutch diversity

Within Middle Dutch we can distinguish five large dialect groups: Flemish (including Zealandic), sometimes subdivided into West and East Flemish, was spoken in the modern region of West and East Flanders (Ghent, Bruges, Courtray); Brabantian was the language of the area covered by the modern Dutch province of North Brabant and the Belgian provinces of Brabant and Antwerp; Hollandic was mainly used in the present day provinces of North and South Holland and parts of Utrecht, while the people in Limburg (now a part of the Netherlands and Belgium) communicated in the Limburgish dialect. The final dialect group – East Middle Dutch – was spoken in the area of the modern provinces of Gelderland, Overijssel, Drenthe and parts of Groningen.

Fig. 1: The Middle Dutch dialectal groups

The last two of the Middle Dutch dialects mentioned above, Limburgish and East Middle Dutch, show features, respectively, of Middle High German and Middle Low German, since these two areas border directly onto the German language area. While East Middle Dutch consists of Low Saxon dialects, the other Middle Dutch dialect groups belong to the Franconian dialects. Finally, there is the present-day province of Friesland (cf. the white area in fig. 1) where, in the Middle Ages, Old Frisian dialects were spoken; Frisian is viewed as a separate language.

Identifying dialect features in a particular text starts in those texts whose place and time of origin are known. Local administrative and judicial documents are particularly suitable for this, as they are mostly written in the local dialect and because they are dated. Unfortunately not all surviving texts have a clearly identifiable place of origin. A single manuscript can often show features of several dialects. One reason for this can be that the scribe may speak a different dialect and so allows features of his own dialect to slip in, as it were, or even that he is making a conscious adaptation of the text into his own dialect. A further possibility is that words are borrowed from another dialect for the sake of preserving a rhyme. Or it can simply be the influence of Flemish-Brabantian tradition – in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries the cultural and literary centre of gravity lay in Flanders. Sometimes marked dialect features are consciously avoided, for example if the text is directed at a wider audience.

The date of origin of texts can also often be difficult to establish. Literary texts in particular, which are very often copies of copies of copies, show archaic characteristics alongside newer features from the same dialect; dialects too, of course, change with the passage of time.

Some features can spread to another dialect region, and there displace other characteristics which in turn sometimes even disappear completely. The responsibility for these changes is shared between increasing mobility and advancing urbanisation. As travelling became easier and towns grew, there was increasing contact with other dialects or even foreign languages. The need for a unified language arose. The invention of printing (ca. 1450) also led to an avoidance of dialect idiosyncrasies, because the texts were now addressed to a wider public. That is one of the first steps in the direction towards the development of a standard language.

1.1 Differences between dialects

Dialects can differ in several respects. On the lexical level, for example, one dialect may have a different word for the same concept, or the same word may have a different meaning in another dialect. Sometimes the texts themselves include explicit comments on differences in word usage, as Maerlant's comment (in Der naturen bloeme, around 1270) on the various names for a hedgehog shows: Een eghel heet ment in Diet-scher tale, in Vlaemsche een heertse, dat wetic wale (= 'In (northern) Dutch it is called an eghel, but a heertse in Flemish, that I know well').

On the morphological level – i.e. inflection and word formation – variations can arise in the use of different affixes. For example, for female designations the suffixes -inne and -es (gravinne, abdesse = 'countess', 'abbess') are generally used, whereas -egge and -nede (spinnegge, vriendnede = 'spinster', 'friend') are a distinctly Flemish feature. In Brabantian we can also find the suffix -erse (burgersche, hooierse = 'citizen', 'haymaker'). The suffix -ster (melcster = 'milkmaid') only arises north of the great rivers Rhine and Meuse. Differences at the syntactic level – i.e. word order – have, unfortunately, hardly been investigated.

The greatest differences between dialects are of course to be found in the areas of spelling and pronunciation, at the phonological level. For example, a typical feature of Flemish is the unexpected presence or absence of the letter h- at the start of words beginning with a vowel. We frequently find this phenomenon in the Flemish manuscript Van den vos Reynaerde [VdvR], a poem also of Flemish origin, which is edited here: hute (1241), haex (701) for ute, aex (= 'out', 'axe, hatchet') and ondert (232), oech (509) for hondert, hooch (= 'hundred', 'high').

Important features of the Hollandic dialect are the relics from Old Dutch shown in the combination -ft- for -cht- (gecoft, after instead of gekocht, achter = 'bought', 'behind'), and the diminutive forms using -gen or -gien (huysgen = ‘little house’). Limburgish and eastern dialects still preserve the combination old instead of oud (wolde, solde instead of woude, soude = ‘would’, ‘should’), and in Brabantian texts there is often an o instead of u (dos, vrocht = ‘thus’, ‘fruit’).¹

2 Spelling and pronunciation

The spelling of Middle Dutch texts differs greatly from Modern Dutch spelling. Since there was no spelling tradition, writers had to rely on the Latin spelling system and to suit it to their own needs. Middle Dutch spelling is usually characterized as more phonetic and less systematic, compared to the Modern Dutch system.

The spelling is more phonetic because it is largely guided by the sound, i.e. the pronunciation. In Middle Dutch texts we find forms like hant, lant, daet, hi vint (= ‘hand’, ‘land’, ‘deed’, ‘he finds’), all spelled with a -t because that is the sound one hears. In contrast, Modern Dutch spells the nouns with a -d (hand, land, daad) because of a principle of uniformity: singular and plural forms are spelled the same – hand-handen, land-landen, daad-daden – despite the difference in pronunciation.² Similarly, modern verb forms like hij vindt keep the -d of the verbal stem although one does not hear it. The modern spelling uses a principle of analogy in these cases: the verbal stem should remain identifiable in the different forms of a verb and the regular ending -t is added for the 3rd person singular (komen/hij kom-t, vinden/hij vind-t = ‘to come/he comes, to find/he finds’). Middle Dutch, however, does not care for these analogical relations, its speakers write a -t whenever they hear it (hi vint).

Apart from these deviations with respect to modern Dutch there are also of course a great many variants within Middle Dutch itself. In the various writing centres (like scriptoria and chancelleries) the spelling conventions employed could often be quite divergent, and would also continue to change over time. An example of this can be seen in the spelling of long vowels. In very early texts these were still represented by a single letter, which can lead to confusion with the short vowels. In slightly later texts we often find -e- used as a sign of length, or sometimes an -i-: jaer (115) or jair (= ‘year’). The modern habit of doubling the vowel (jaar) arises in the fifteenth century.

Because of the absence of a standard language, dialect differences are particularly liable to show up in texts. Even within a single text inconsistencies are common.

¹ We cannot go into any details here; for a more extensive survey of dialect features see, for example, Van der Wal & Van Bree (1992: chapter 5).

² Dutch (like German, but unlike English) has final devoicing: voiced occlusives like /d/ are pronounced unvoiced (as [t]) at the end of a word or syllable.

This may not be so surprising in literary texts, since, after all, the surviving texts are mostly copies carried out in turn by a series of scribes. However, in official texts too, even though written by a single writer, we can often find different forms for the same word.

Punctuation, scarce as it is in Middle Dutch manuscripts, does not correspond with modern practice. For example, a full stop may be added at the end of a line of verse, even if the sentence runs on to the next line. If rhyming texts are written continuously (scriptura continua, fairly uncommon anyway), the lines of verse are separated from each other by full stops. Full stops are also used to identify Roman numerals and to distinguish them from the ordinary letters, as in Ende gaffer mede .XL. slaghe (1676 = 'and gave (Reynaert) forty lashes with it').³

In Middle Dutch we may find a number of features which still occur in modern Dutch but which today are only accepted in the spoken language and not in writing. The most obvious of these are phenomena known as assimilation, clisis and reduction.⁴

Assimilation – The term assimilation means 'making the same', i.e. the adaptation of a sound to its surroundings. This occurs mainly at word boundaries or between parts of words. For example, the word ontbieden (= 'to summon') is often pronounced as [ombi:den]. In this case, the /n/ assimilates to the /b/ by being pronounced with both lips and therefore sounds like an /m/. However, despite this pronunciation, the spelling of ontbieden never changes in modern Dutch. Yet, in Middle Dutch we can often also find this word written as ombiden or ombieden (472).

The mutual influence of Auslaut (final sound) and Anlaut (initial sound) in spelling can also be seen to affect consecutive words, i.e. at word boundaries. For example: op die (= 'on the') is often spelled as optie, where the voiced /d/ has lost its voicing under the influence of the unvoiced /p/.

This example also shows us that word division in Middle Dutch texts is not as fixed as in modern Dutch. Unstressed particles especially (i.e. words which primarily have a grammatical meaning, like articles, prepositions, pronouns etc.) are often written attached to the start of the following word (as in biderschepenen wille = 'with agreement of the jurors', teseggene: 'to say').

Clisis – A phenomenon which is closely related to this is known as clisis. Here, too, we are concerned with two or more words being written together, but now this involves the loss of sounds. Weakly stressed words – mostly particles – attach themselves to a

³ However, in this edition of Van den vos Reynaerde the full stops marking Roman numerals are not retained.

⁴ In the Glossary, cases of assimilation, reduction and clisis have all been marked with '(clis.)'.

strongly stressed word at the expense of part of their sound. Depending on whether the inclination (process of clisis) appears at the start or end of the word this is called proclisis and enclisis respectively. Examples of proclisis are: darme man < die arme man (= 'the poor man') or, from VdvR, teerst dat < te eerst dat (1431, = 'as soon as'). Examples of enclisis are: moetti < moet ghi (1444, = 'you must'); sechdi < seecht ghi (135, = 'do you say'); dedine < dede hi hem (144, = 'he made him')

Such enclitic forms occur very frequently in Middle Dutch texts and can sometimes be ambiguous. For example, the form hoordi can be from hoort ghi (= 'do you hear'), hoordet ghi ('did you hear'), hoorde hi (= 'did he hear'), or in exceptional cases even from hore di (= (I) hear you'). The correct interpretation can only be deduced from the context.

Reduction – Another feature which we find in Middle Dutch spelling is known as reduction, which manifests itself primarily in unstressed syllables, and is closely related to assimilation. Within this term we include the disappearance of sounds and the shortening of vowels or their weakening to an unstressed /e/ - the so-called schwa [ə].

Depending where the sound disappears from, we refer to it as procope (loss at the start of the word: as in ebben instead of hebben, = 'to have'), syncope (loss in the middle of a word, as in hooft instead of hovet, = 'head'), or apocope (loss at the end of a word, as in nach and vrou instead of nacht (= 'night') and vrouwe (= 'woman')). Apocope of a final schwa (as in vrou < vrouwe and ic heb < ic hebbe = 'I have') is particularly common in Middle Dutch, and it is closely connected to the reduction of case endings and the accompanying loss of inflection.

Epenthesis – Not only do sounds disappear, sometimes an extra one creeps in. This phenomenon is called epenthesis and we find it, for example, in a word like arm (= 'poor') which is often pronounced as arem. Unlike modern Dutch where a clearly heard epenthetic sjwa [arəm] is regarded as sloppy, in Middle Dutch it is also reflected in the spelling; see, for instance, in VdvR, arem (38, 101) and waremhede (537, = 'warmth').

No matter how varied Middle Dutch spelling might be, it is still an important means of helping us to understand the pronunciation. In general a difference in the spelling reflects a difference in the sound. Alongside this, the rhymes can sometimes be of great value in the search for the correct phonological realisation of the characters. We should bear in mind, though, that any reconstruction of the pronunciation is always speculative. Our pronunciation of Middle Dutch is certainly not 'correct' (i.e. authentic): it is very close to current normal Dutch pronunciation and it is heavily influenced by it. To give one example: we know for certain that Middle Dutch -ij- was not yet a diphthong but was still a long monophthong. That is why we always give the same pronunciation to Middle Dutch -ij- as in pijn, and -ie- as in sien, viz. a long [i:]. Yet these two sounds never rhyme with each other in Middle Dutch, nor do they generally alternate in individual words. This suggests that -ie- must actually have represented a different pronunciation from that given by -ij-. There must have been a difference which we can no longer grasp.⁵

3 Grammatical structures

One of the most striking differences between Middle Dutch and Modern Dutch is the fact that Middle Dutch (like modern German) still exhibits a fully-fledged case system. Nouns, adjectives, articles, pronouns, and numerals are inflected according to their function in the sentence, in other words, they change their form to conform to the 'case' in which they are being used. This morphologically coded case system eventually got lost. A residue is found in modern Dutch idiomatic expressions like de heer des huizes [genitive] (= 'landlord; boss'), but by and large it had disappeared in the seventeenth century.

Just like the other members of the Germanic language family, Dutch has the accent on the first main syllable. The final syllables which become weakened as a consequence of this are often reduced, or lost entirely. This can also be observed in Middle Dutch. The loss of case endings during the three centuries covered by Middle Dutch meant that the function of the constituents had to be rendered in a different way. A more fixed word order and the use of prepositions slowly took over this task. For example, a construction with the preposition van replaced the earlier genitive ending (as in des vaders huis > het huis van de vader = 'the father's house, the house of the father'). Of course the change took place gradually, and the two alternatives were used alongside each other for a long time.

3.1 Morphology

3.1.1 Declension – The case system of Middle Dutch comprises four cases. The first case (nominative) can be used for the subject, the nominal part of the predicate or an addressed person. The second case (genitive) expresses a possessive relationship. The function as indirect object is indicated by a form in the third case (dative), whereas a direct object takes the fourth case (accusative). Verbs, adjectives and prepositions are often bound to a particular case. So, for example, the verb pleghen governs a noun in the genitive, as in pleghen der eeren (35, = ‘to practise honour – to act honourably’), as does the adjective werdich (as in werdich enechs prijs = ‘worthy of some praise’). The dative is used, for example, with the verb slachten, as, for example, in slachten si den raven (18, = ‘they resemble the raven’) or with the preposition met (as in met luder sprake = ‘with a loud voice’).

The four cases are morphologically coded, i.e. they are marked by case endings on nouns and adjectives. Middle Dutch nouns can be subdivided into two large groups: the strong nouns and the weak nouns. Nouns ending in -e in the nominative singular usually belong to the group with the weak inflection; a consonantal ending in this case indicates strong inflection for the word (but there are exceptions to this general rule). Just like the nouns, personal names are also inflected: male names can follow the strong or the weak inflection, whereas female names usually change form in line with the weak inflection. Compare for instance Reynaert sprac (2650, = ‘R. spoke’; nominative) with Also was Reynaerde gheschiet (54, = ‘this had happened to R.’; dative). Furthermore, the inflection is determined by the gender of the noun, where we need to distinguish between masculine, feminine and neuter words. The first two have merged in modern Dutch to form a single group, the so-called ‘de-words’. Dictionaries of Middle Dutch often mention two genders for a noun, which usually reflects regional and/or temporal variation. Finally, the number of the noun is important in determining the correct inflectional form. We distinguish between singular and plural.

To illustrate the (early) Middle Dutch case system, we present the declension patterns of the nouns gast (= ‘guest’), mensche (= ‘human’), hof (= ‘court’), herte (= ‘heart’), daet (= ‘deed’), and siele (= ‘soul’), listed here side by side with the definite article – which emerged from the demonstrative pronoun – and the adjective goet (= ‘good’).

Table 1: Declension patterns in Middle Dutch⁶

The case, gender and number of the article, demonstrative pronoun and adjective depend on the noun with which they form a syntactic constituent. In some circumstances, however, the adjective is uninflected. Just as in modern Dutch, the adjective used predicatively is used in its basic form, as in die ridder es goet (= ‘the knight is good’), as opposed to its attributive use in die goede ridder (‘the good knight’). In the typical Middle Dutch feature of post-positioning, where the adjective immediately follows the noun, it does not change form, as in die ridder goet (= ‘the knight good’), die vrouwe vroet (= ‘the woman wise’). Adjectives used independently are treated either as nouns or as adjectives, and can accordingly also be inflected in either way.

The infinitive form of the verb too gets the dative -e ending if it is preceded by the particle te, as in te spreken (= ‘to speak’), te segghene (= ‘to say’).

Personal pronouns in modern Dutch show different forms for the use as subject and as object (like wij vs. ons (= ‘we’ vs. ‘us’)). In Middle Dutch they still have a full inflectional paradigm.

Table 2: Personal pronouns in Middle Dutch⁷

In the second person the plural forms of the personal pronoun can also be used for singular referents. The use of the plural form then signals politeness. The pronoun ghi (= ‘you’), for example, can indicate the plural as well as the singular. However, for the singular there is also the pronoun du (= ‘thou’), which is only used occasionally and even then is often not used consistently, as, for example, in Du oude geck, God moet bederven u lijf (= ‘Thou old fool, God rot your body’). This pronoun is mostly a sign of intimacy – cf. Reynaert, wat haetstu (562, = ‘R., what did you eat?’) – or a lower social level for the person addressed. It also often occurs in situations of contempt or anger, as in Verma-lendijt, Lamfroyt, moet dijn herte sijn! Du best dulre dan een zwijn (916-18, = ‘Damned, L., you deserve to be! You have less sense than a pig’).

Enclisis is very common with personal pronouns. The third person forms in particular have several enclitic variants (printed in italics in table 2), which are used very frequently; see, for example, doe dedine [< deed hi hem] sitten gaen (144, = ‘then he made him sit’).

Middle Dutch lacks special forms for the reflexive pronoun, the personal pronouns are used to express reflexivity, as in Brune liet hem verdoren (677, = ‘Bruun allowed himself to be fooled’). The reflexive third person pronoun sich/sick is first found in the eastern dialects in the fourteenth century, from which it later spread to other dialects.

3.1.2 Plural formation – The commonest plural endings in Middle Dutch are: -e for nouns which use the strong declension, -n for those with the weak declension, and -s

for many words ending in -el, -en and -er (as in duvels, tekens, cloosters = ‘devils’, ‘signs’, ‘monasteries’), for loan words (pelgrims) and for some monosyllables (as in wijfs, mans = ‘women, men’). A limited number of words can form their plural with -er (as in kint - kinder, ei - eier = ‘children’, ‘eggs’). There is also the possibility of the singular and plural forms being identical for some neuter monosyllabic words with a long stem syllable, for example when a word with either a long vowel or with a short vowel is followed by two consonants (as in dat been - die been, dat dinc - die dinc = ‘leg(s)’, ‘thing(s)’). However, these words are also found with a plural ending -e.

A separate category is formed by the cumulative plurals which we can find in nouns with a ‘normal’ -er plural. In addition to -er, there is another common plural morpheme attached to these words (as in kint - kind-er / kind-er-e / kind-er-en / kind-er-s – the same phenomenon as in English ‘children’). Cumulative plurals are sometimes the result of a morphological reinterpretation, when a plural form is interpreted as a singular. This is most likely to happen with words which generally refer to plurals, for example, scoe (= ‘shoe’ sg.) – scoen (pl.) > scoen (sg.) – scoene / scoenen / scoens (pl.). This phenomenon can also occur in the other direction, if a word in the singular is interpreted as a plural form and loses its ending. This occurs mostly with words ending in -en in the singular, as in raven (‘raven’ (sg.)) – ravens (pl.) > raaf (sg.) – raven (pl.).

3.1.3 Conjugation – There are, just as in Modern Dutch, three different types of verbs in Middle Dutch: strong, weak, and irregular verbs. The strong verbs change the vowel in the verb stem to form their preterite and past participle, as the forms in the Glossary clearly show. This phenomenon – indicated by the German term Ablaut – follows a fixed pattern. This means that we can divide the strong verbs into seven classes.

	Infinitive	Preterite sg.	Preterite pl.	Past participle
1.	biten (= ‘to bite’)	beet	beten	gebeten
2a.	bedriegen (= ‘to betray’)	bedroog	bedrogen	bedrogen
2b.	crupen (= ‘to crawl’)	croop	cropen	gecropsen
3a.	vinden (= ‘to find’)	vant	vonden	gevonden
3b.	werpen (= ‘to throw’)	warp	worpen	geworpen
4.	nemen (= ‘to take’)	nam	namen	genomen
5.	geven (= ‘to give’)	gaf	gaven	gegeven
6.	varen (= ‘to go’)	voer	voeren	gevaaren
7.	laten (= ‘to let’)	liet	lieten	gelaten

Table 3: Division of strong verbs into seven classes

Weak verbs form the past participle and the preterite by adding a dental suffix to the verbal stem, -d(e) or -t(e). The third group, the irregular verbs, comprises verbs which change the vowel in the present tense (ic can - wi connen = ‘I can, we can; I am/we are able’), or weak verbs with a divergent preterite (denken - dacht; brengen - bracht = ‘to think – thought; to bring – brought’).

In the following table we present the paradigm for the indicative forms of a weak verb (keren = ‘to turn’) and a strong verb (nemen = ‘to take’). The infinitive form is in both cases marked by the ending -en, the past participles are formed by adding a prefix ghe- and a suffix: -t for the weak verbs, -en for the strong verbs: ghekeert and ghenomen. The forms of the present participle are kerende and nemende. There are different forms for the singular and the plural imperative: sg. keer/kere and neem/neme, pl. keert/keret and neemt/nemet.

	Weak verb: keren		Strong verb: nemen
	Present	Preterite	Present	Preterite
1sg	ic kere	ic keerde	ic neme	ic nam
2sg	du keers	du keertes	du neems	du naems
3sg	hi keert	hi keerde	hi neemt	hi nam
1pl	wi keren	wi keerden	wi nemen	wi namen
2pl	ghi keert	ghi keerdet	ghi neemt	ghi naemt
3pl	si keren	si keerden	si nemen	si namen

Table 4: Conjugation: indicative forms of a weak and a strong verb in Middle Dutch

Middle Dutch uses the subjunctive in indirect speech or to express, for example, a wish or a supposition. The only differences in verb endings between indicative and subjunctive are found in the 3rd person singular present tense (subjunctive: hi kere, hi neme), and, for strong verbs, also in the 1st and 3rd person singular preterite (ic name, hi name). In all other instances the subjunctive forms are identical to the indicative.

3.2 Syntax

At the syntactic level the differences between the Middle Dutch dialects are smaller than, for example, in vocabulary or phonology. We will present some general aspects of Middle Dutch syntax.

3.2.1 Word order – The positioning of the finite verb plays an important role in the description of primary and subordinate clauses. Main clauses in Middle Dutch use the same word order as modern Dutch (or English): mostly SVO, i.e. Subject – (finite) Verb – Object, as in Hi stal tgroete (2105, = ‘He stole the big ones’). In declarative sentences the finite verb usually takes the second position, preceded by the subject on the first position. The fact that main clauses have the verb in the second position leads to inversion whenever the first position is taken, not by the subject but by another element: the subject then follows the finite verb. This may, for example, occur in questions where the first position is filled with an interrogative pronoun: Wat sechdi van [...] (135, = ‘What do you say of [...]?’), or when the first position is taken by an object or an adverbial: Doe leide men Coppem in dat graf (451, = ‘[Then] they laid C. in the grave’). The translation of the last example shows that English differs from (Middle) Dutch in that it allows two syntactic units (‘Then’ and ‘they’) to precede the finite verb, whereas in Dutch the subject needs to be moved in such cases: ‘men leide’ > ‘Doe leide men’.

In subordinate clauses, word order is not as fixed as in modern Dutch (where we usually find SOV). In Middle Dutch subordinate clauses the finite verb can take almost every position, except the first one which is normally reserved for the subject.

The following example shows the normal word order for main clause and subordinate clause: Hi hadde te hove so vele mesdaen, dat hire niet dorste gaen (51-52, = ‘He had behaved so badly at court, that he did not dare go’). In the main clause the finite verb (hadde) takes the second position and the subject is found on the first position, while in the subordinate clause the finite verb dorste together with the infinitive gaen appears in final position. Compare this with the sentence where the finite verb takes the second position in the subordinate clause (which would not be possible in modern Dutch): Alsoe die coninc dit versach, Dat hi hadde dat hoege verloren (1324-25, = ‘When the king noticed that he had lost an eye’).

The word order in the nominal group shows some peculiarities when compared to modern Dutch (or English). Usually we find a pattern such as ‘article/demonstrative pronoun – adjective – noun’. However, in Middle Dutch the adjective can also follow the noun (= die ridder goet: ‘the good knight’), and a possessive pronoun, too, is sometimes found after the noun it belongs to (die boeke sijn = ‘his books’). In this case adjective and pronoun remain uninflected.

Genitives, too, can appear before or after the noun. This sometimes leads to very complicated structures as in the following phrase: sijn neve Jan, sGraven zone van Henegouwen (= ‘his nephew Jan, the son of the Count of Henegouwen’). This kind of extrapositioning is no longer possible in modern Dutch because of the absence of case endings.

3.2.2 Passive voice and impersonal constructions – A passive construction is used to accentuate the role of some participant other than the agent in an event. While in the active voice the agent usually is syntactically realised as subject (as in ic screef desen brief

= ‘I wrote this letter’), the passive voice shifts the focus of attention to the object or person undergoing the action by making it the subject of the sentence, or it emphasizes the action itself (desen brief wart gescreven bi mi = ‘this letter was written by me’). Passive constructions in Middle Dutch are expressed analytically by an auxiliary (sijn or werden) and the past participle of the main verb. The agent of the action can be expressed by using the prepositions van or bi.⁸ The passive voice is also used in VdvR, for example in hi seide dat desen brief bi hem alleene ware ghescreven (3287-88, = ‘he had to say (lit.: said) that this letter had been written by himself alone’).

Impersonal constructions, hardly ever found in Modern Dutch, are relatively frequent in Middle Dutch. They are characterised by the absence of a nominative subject. A number of verbs occur in both personal and impersonal constructions. Originally the impersonal construction consisted of a verb form in the 3rd person singular, a dative element and a genitive element: mi lanct waters (= ‘I long for water’), where the personal pronoun mi is a dative form and waters is a genitive. Later on, the genitive object could be replaced by a prepositional phrase (mi lanct na di = ‘I long for you’), an infinitive (mi lanct te comene = ‘I long to come’), or a dat-clause (mi lanct dat ghi comt = ‘I long for you to come’)).⁹

3.2.3 Negation – The most common negation in Middle Dutch consists of the elements en or ne and another negating word such as niet, niemant and geen [‘not, nobody, none’], with the first element always immediately preceding the finite verb form. Two examples: Dat ics vergheten niet ne mach (2666, = ‘That I cannot forget it’); Doe ne conste Reynaert niet bejaghen (3351, = ‘Then Reynaert was unable to find anything’). However, it is also possible for a sentence to be negated with just one of these elements: Dinen aerbeit wert niet cleene (2871, = ‘Your work is not light’). Negation with just the single particle en or ne before the finite verb occurs in Middle Dutch only in specific circumstances but is actually the more original form, and was the major option in Old Dutch. However, this negating particle gradually lost its force and acquired an accompanying negative adverb or noun to reinforce itself, which subsequently took over the negative function entirely. A similar development can, in fact, also be seen in other Indogermanic languages. We can sum up the development of negation in Dutch as follows:

Old Dutch	en / ne
Middle Dutch	en / ne + niet, geen, niemand, ...
Modern Dutch	niet, geen, niemand, ...

8 The preposition door, which is the standard means of introducing the agent in passive sentences in modern Dutch, only arises after the Middle Ages.

9 Examples are taken from Van der Wal & Quak (1994: 84).

Note that many negative adverbs and pronouns which are used in Dutch to express negation, arose through a proclitic binding with the negating word ne (ne + iet > niet, ne + ooit > nooit).

In addition to clearly negative words like niet or geen, other words such as maer (= 'only'), cume and nauwe (both mean 'scarcely') also have a negative value. These can also occur in connection with en or ne (Die ne had mer één coe = 'Who only had one cow'). Moreover, a negating word can also appear in subordinate clauses beginning with eer (Eer ic noit dit werc bestont = 'before I (n)ever started this work'), clauses which are dependent on a comparative or superlative (as in Die soonste die nie men sach = 'The finest that was (n)ever seen'), or in sentences which have a negative implication (as in Hoe dul es hi ende wel sot die mannen geloeft nembermere, where the negative implication is 'you must never believe men').

To avoid confusion with negation using two elements it seems sensible to reserve the term double negation for sentences in which two or more negative adverbs or pronouns are used alongside each other, as in Daerne quam oec nie geen man, ... or dan [< dat en*] was niewerinc noit vernomen ...* which mean literally 'there came also never no man' and 'that was seen nowhere never'. Against the rules of logic these negative elements do not cancel each other out but reinforce each other. Unlike modern Dutch, where such constructions are only tolerated in the spoken language, this double negation also occurs in the written forms of Middle Dutch dialects.

1. Editions

Although reference is often made to ‘the’ Reynaert, the work’s transmission shows that there is not one ‘Reynaert’. First of all, there are two, not just one, Middle Dutch poems about the fox: Van den vos Reynaerde and Reynaerts historie (sometimes referred to as Reynaert I and Reynaert II). But even if we limit ourselves here to Van den vos Reynaerde, it must be stressed that there is no single, unequivocal text. There are five manuscripts, the oldest of which dates from the end of the thirteenth century and the youngest from the beginning of the fifteenth century. These five copies or redactions – although all based on a common original – display mutual textual deviations. Not only does the text of redaction A have an extra 76 lines as compared to redaction F, the redactions also differ considerably as to the content and the order of the lines. This is not surprising taking into account a process of transmission stretching across a century and a half, as scribes will always introduce textual variants when copying texts. These do not only consist of accidental mistakes, different spellings or the intrusion of dialects (which in rhymed position often induced scribes in a later phase of the work’s transmission to make ‘corrections’), but also of consciously introduced adaptations of the content and modernizations of the work’s linguistic forms.

When redactions are published, various approaches are possible, depending on the intended use of the edition. The manuscript text may be published photographically in a facsimile edition, for example. In this form the following are available: redaction A (Janssens a.o. 1991) and redaction J (Klitzing 1989). However, for scholars it is at least as important that the manuscript text is accessible in a transliteration which may be cited. One option in that case is a diplomatic edition, that is, the publication of an accurate transcription of the signs that constitute the text, including all mistakes and peculiarities. Redactions A, F, E, G, H, L, Pg have been published in diplomatic editions by Wytze Hellenga (1952). His synoptic standard edition replaced a number of older diplomatic editions, especially the work of Foeke Buitenrust Hettema (A: Buitenrust Hettema & Muller 1903; A, F, E: Buitenrust Hettema & Degering 1921). However, Buitenrust Hettema’s introduction, notes and glossary – intended as a sequel to the publication of 1903 – remain an inexhaustible source of information (Buitenrust Hettema 1910). Hegman (1989) published a diplomatic edition of redaction J.

A critical edition is another option. In that case a transcription is made, with corrections (emendations) of obvious errors. Often punctuation, spelling, rhymes etc. have also been normalized. Most Reynaert editions are critical editions of redaction A. Important among them are Jonckbloet (1856), Martin (1874), Van Dis (1972), Lulofs (1983) and Bouwman & Besamusca (2002). The older editions remain of great value on account of their introductions and critical apparatus.

A special form of critical edition is the reconstruction of the lost original on the basis of all surviving sources. A general introduction on how to deal with textual variants and textual criticism when editing Middle Dutch texts may be found in De Haan (1973) and Salemans (2000). Once the relationship between the sources has been established, variant readings within and between families of the stemma – the ‘family tree’ – are compared in order to find the ‘oldest’, or, when this is impossible, the ‘best’ reading. As the selected readings in this approach derive from different sources, normalization of the linguistic forms is necessary before the text can be published. Among Reynaert scholars it is especially Jacob Wybrand Muller who has been engaged with this type of textual criticism (Muller 1917 and 1940). The third revised edition of his critical edition (Muller 1944) is, together with the second revised edition of his exegetical commentary (Muller 1942), a philological monument, but as a reconstruction of the original poem it is not undisputed nowadays.

A number of modern translations of Van den vos Reynaerde are available: into English verse: Colledge 1967; into French prose: Wouters 1974; into German prose: Berteloot & Worm 1982; into German verse: Poeth 2005; into Dutch prose: Bouwman & Besamusca 2007; into Dutch verse for example: Van Altena 1979, Eykman 2008, Posthuma 2008.

2. Research

Van den vos Reynaerde has been subjected to intensive research by philologists for more than two centuries. This edition is indebted to their contributions, as is evident from the footnotes to the Introduction and other chapters. It is quite impossible to discuss in depth the secondary literature on Van den vos Reynaerde here. We shall limit ourselves to some trends from the last few decades, paying particular attention to a number of contributions in English.

Gerhard Arendt (1965) was the first to examine Van den vos Reynaerde systematically as a literary text, focusing on the importance of literary space and the consistent structure of Reynaert’s tricks. The poet contrasts the orderly world of the court with the wilderness, where Reynaert rules and his opponents lose their way, also in a moral sense. As the court animals pretend to be better than they are, they can be unmasked: confronted with the wily fox, the court animals are each time deceived and punished according to a fixed pattern. A similar approach of the literary space was applied by Van Daele (1994), albeit with different interpretative results.

Like Arendt, Frank Lulofs (1975) concentrated on the text itself, but did so from a completely different angle: not, like Arendt, interpreting deductively (from general ideas to the actual poem), but inductively: from the details in all available sources to cautious generalisations. On the basis of A 1885-2017, for example, Lulofs demonstrated not only the exhaustive degree to which, in his view, a continuous literary and cultural-historical commentary should be conducted, but also how research into variants may use the sources as valuable witnesses for the later reception of the text, rather than as mere stepping stones on the way to a reconstruction of a lost original. His findings were summarized in the hundred pages of commentary in his edition (Lulofs 1983).

From the outset, research into Van den vos Reynaerde concentrated on the poem's relationship with the Old French source text(s). The emphasis lay especially on textual agreements, for one reason because it was at one time argued – wrongly – that Van den vos Reynaerde was the original text, and the Old French Le Plaid its adaptation. The original status of Van den vos Reynaerde was defended primarily by Willems (1836) and – as regards the first part of the work that was supposed to have been written by Arnout – by Van Mierlo (1927). These views came under attack from Jonckbloet (1856), Delbouille (1929) and others. D.C. Tinbergen collected the agreements with Old French source texts known from older Reynaert research (Muller 1942, Concordantiën III). Only relatively recently were the differences with the Roman de Renart studied, at first by Heeroma (1970) and later by Bouwman (1991). They charted and analysed all the interpolations, omissions, and transpositions that provide an insight into Willem's method of composition and views on literature.

The meaning that is assigned to the story is intimately connected with the way the main protagonist is regarded. For most of the older philologists the fox is a positive character. Arendt sees the fox as the only animal who acts true to its nature, while Lulofs regards him as the leader who acts in the interests of his clan; the fox may not always be flawless from a moral point of view, he is nevertheless legally innocent. Heeroma sees the fox as the alter ego of Willem, a poète maudit who takes revenge on his critics at court through the fox. In these interpretations it is the corrupt legal procedure and the court where appearances count for everything that are denounced, rather than the fox who by the clever use of his tricks successfully defends himself against his opponents.

A very different view has been put forward by Van Oostrom (1983), who regards Reynaert as fundamentally malevolent, which is in accordance with the negative image that the fox has in other Middle Dutch works and with the epithet which the poet and fellow animals use repeatedly to characterize Reynaert as die felle: that is, the scoundrel or villain. This opinion, which holds the fox responsible in part for the disintegration of the court community, was confirmed by Wackers (1986), elaborated by Bouwman (1991) and particularly by Van Daele (1994), but was also modified by Reynaert (1996).

It should be noted, however, that a rejection of the fox's behaviour does not mean that the work's audience may not at the same time admire his verbal ingenuity or laugh at the disasters that befall his opponents. There is much in favour of assuming a multiple attitude towards the text among the implied audience, which on the one hand is concentrated on the narrative action (sharing the fiction), and on the other hand on a process of reflection on the action, at a certain remove from the text, assisted by the narrator's asides and the effective use of certain forms of dramatic irony.

To conclude, it seems useful to mention some publications in English that provide information about areas of research devoted to Van den vos Reynaerde. Most of these contributions are of a comparative nature, as they have been written for medievalists outside the Netherlands who are specialists in other medieval literatures. According to Bouwman (1990), Willem used two Old French versions of Le Plaid (branch I) for his reworked text. Bouwman (1992a) demonstrates that Willem also derived material from other branches of the Roman de Renart, in particular motifs and lines from Le Pèlerinage de Renart (branch VIII). Bouwman (1992b) compares the texts of Le Plaid and Van den vos Reynaerde to show how Willem shifts the emphasis in his poem, balancing between tradition and originality. Besamusca (1996) discusses Willem's adaptation of the macrostructure of Le Plaid, the way older stories are repeated by the characters themselves and the interventions of the narrator. Wackers (1994) concentrates on the relationship between words and deeds in Middle Dutch Reynaert stories. Wackers (2000a) investigates the literary context of the Roman de Renart, Van den vos Reynaerde and Reynaerts historie and its implications for the implied audience. He also points (as does Meuwese 2006) to marginal decorations in contemporary Flemish manuscripts alluding to the Cuwaert-episode (lines 135-164), which might help to identify the cultural context of Van den vos Reynaerde. The interpretation of Wackers (2006) tries to harmonize the negative character of Reynaert with the comical effect that the tricks he plays on his opponents have on the audience. Jacoby (1970) concentrates on the legal elements in Van den vos Reynaerde (although some of his interpretations are now disputed; cf. Bouwman 1991). Finally, every reader of this edition who has developed an appetite for Middle Dutch texts will benefit from Kooper (1994). This collection of essays about medieval Dutch literature in its European context includes a bibliography of translations and a chronological table.

3. Middle Dutch (by Matthias Hüning & Ulrike Vogl)

The chapter 'Middle Dutch – A short introduction' (see above pp. 257–271) is mainly based on the online publication Geschiedenis van het Nederlands / History of the Dutch language (Hüning a.o. 1999).¹ The online text has been modified and updated to fit the context of this edition.

Middle Dutch is, of course, also treated in textbooks on the history of the Dutch language, like De Vries a.o. (1995), Van den Toorn a.o. (1997) or Van der Sijs (2005). Janssens & Marynissen (2005) focus on the external history of Dutch, while Van der Wal & Van Bree (1992) present a very good overview of the linguistic structure of Middle Dutch (especially in the chapters 5 and 6). Van der Wal & Van Bree (1992) has been used extensively when preparing the chapter in this volume; many of its examples and especially the tables are based on the rich material in this book. A textbook (with text fragments and exercises) dedicated solely to Middle Dutch is Hogenhout-Mulder (1985). Mooijaart & Van der Wal (2008) presents a course in Middle Dutch and Early Modern Dutch (which also includes text fragments and exercises). All these textbooks are written in Dutch. An overview of the history of Dutch in German is presented by Vekeman & Ecke (1992).

For English-language readers a number of texts are available. Wim Daniëls (2005) presents a (very) short history of the Dutch language. Earlier, Colette van Kerckvoorde wrote an excellent introduction to Middle Dutch (1993). It is much more detailed than the chapter in this edition can be, and it contains many text fragments, used mainly for illustration purposes. An introduction to the structure of Middle Dutch can also be found in Van der Wal & Quak (1994), embedded in a broader overview of Old and Middle Continental West Germanic.

Middle Dutch syntax is the subject of several studies, such as Duinhoven (1988 and 1997), Van Gestel a.o. (1992), or Burridge (1993). An old standard work on this topic is Stoett (1923). A short, but informative, overview of Middle Dutch syntax can be found in Van der Horst (1984). Van der Horst (2008), a new two-volume history of Dutch syntax, devotes several hundred pages to Middle Dutch. Van Loey's studies (1970, 1976 and 1980) are standard reference works on Middle Dutch phonology and morphology. Although not very easily readable, they contain a great deal of information, also on dialect diversity. An overview of Old Dutch can be found in Quak & Van der Horst (2002).

The most comprehensive dictionary of Middle Dutch is the Middelnederlandsch woordenboek (MNW), a dictionary with illustrative citations and references for the different meanings of a word. Derived from this dictionary is a concise dictionary, the ¹ The Dutch version has been translated into English by Dr John Gledhill, who kindly gave permission to use his translation.

Middelnederlandsch handwoordenboek (MNHW), which contains the same entries, with equivalents and paraphrases for the different meanings in modern Dutch. It formed the basis of the Retroraad woordenboek van het Middelnederlands, the retrograde dictionary of Middle Dutch (Van den Berg 1972). A supplement to the MNHW became available in 1983 (Van der Voort van der Kleij 1983). Another concise dictionary was published by Pijnenburg & Schoonheim (1997). While the MNW is a result of the philological tradition of the nineteenth century, we have a very modern lexicographical product for Early Middle Dutch (13th century), the Vroegmiddelnederlands Woordenboek (VMNW), compiled by the Institute for Dutch Lexicology, Leiden. It is this institute that has recently begun to make the historical dictionaries of Dutch available online (cf. <http://gtb.inl.nl/>).

Index of proper names

In the list below the proper names of animals, persons and places have been listed and arranged alphabetically according to their most frequently found non-declined forms. Other instances of the name have been added between round brackets, again in alphabetical order. If only declined forms are found, the declension has been put between round brackets in the entry, as in Alente(n). Emendated proper names have been italicized (see also Editorial principles).

Line numbers have been contracted in all cases where, after a minimum of three references, a character plays a role across a larger number of lines, or is addressed by another character. The line numbers are followed by a concise explanation, while in cases where names denote a particular feature, the literal sense of the name is also given.

Glossary

This glossary contains the complete lexical richness of Van den vos Reynaerde. All word forms found in the text have been listed and referenced, with a maximum of five line-numbers; further occurrences are indicated by 'etc.'(+) All headwords are printed in bold face type. In addition the headword of each article is in upper case, while references to headwords are in lower case.

Articles – The headwords have been derived from the Middelnederlandsch handwoordenboek (barring a few exceptions, marked *) and appear therefore in their normalized form. Every article states word class, main meanings in modern English, word forms found and their line numbers, and, where applicable, references to further articles. In a number of cases word forms have been subdivided further: verbs according to tense, person and number (mood: only imperative forms have been marked, and conjunctive forms insofar as they deviate from the indicative forms), nouns according to singular and plural, some indefinite and demonstrative pronouns according to attributive and independent usage. When two or more words have been collapsed into one word as a result of clisis, this form occurs in two or more articles, with the indication (clis.). For example 'souddi (clis.)' is found under SULLEN as well as GI; 'tfolc (clis.)' under DAT (I) and VOLC. In most articles these clitic forms are listed together at the end of the article (see, for example, HI), except in cases where the word forms have been further subdivided (for an example see WILLEN). In the article the word class indication is followed by one or more meanings (in italics). Meanings have been limited to indications of the general, neutral meaning (or meanings) of a particular word, as the English translation in this edition offers readers the opportunity to study the Middle Dutch word in context. In many cases the articles provide more meanings than used in Van den vos Reynaerde, making this glossary also useful for the study of other Middle Dutch texts. Standard combinations of words with their often specific meanings (like 'leet hebben', 'aflaet doen') are not listed separately (cf. the articles LEET and HEBBEN, AFLAET and DOEN).

References – If the word forms differ from the normalized form in their first three letters, they are listed as a reference to the corresponding article. This means that there are references for words like anscoen | HANTSCHOE; blauwen | BLOUWEN and boem | BOOM, but that no references have been provided in cases like broet | BROOT or bloume | BLOEME. However, exhaustive referencing has been aimed at in two specific categories. All clitic word forms have been separately referenced in the glossary (for example, comdi | COMEN + GI; buter | BUTEN (I) + DIER (II)). This also applies to identical word forms that belong to different articles (for example, baerde | BAERT, BARDE; wilde | WILLEN, WILT (I)). In addition (representative) inflected verb forms with a vowel change in their stems have been referenced, even when the variations from the (normalized) infinitive only occur after three letters: bedrouch | BEDRAGEN; ontbant | ONTBINDEN. As it is impractical to include all the word forms that occur in the edition as separate references in the glossary's alphabet, it should be noted that users will sometimes need to consult the glossary articles creatively. Note that references to other articles may also be found at the end of a particular article; compare, for example, AEN (II) (See: DAERANE); SITTEN (See also: BESITTEN); DACH (See also: CINCENDACH, DOEMSDACH, MIDDACH).

Word index (semantic fields)

In this index the normalized words from the glossary have been arranged into semantic fields derived from a Dutch thesaurus (Brouwers 1991). The procedure was as follows. The Dutch meanings of words selected for the glossary (from the Middelnederlandsch handwoordenboek) were compared with semantic fields in Brouwers' thesaurus. Only those meanings of words that actually occur in Van den vos Reynaerde have been assigned to one or more semantic fields. Within each semantic field words are listed strictly alphabetically.

Brouwers' thesaurus refers by means of an alphabetical register to (numbered) lists containing tens of thousands of modern Dutch words, expressions and proverbs according to their semantic affinity. In our index the principle is applied to the Middle Dutch vocabulary of just one text. Here the two thousand or so normalized words from the glossary are listed according to their semantic affinity. In this way the index refers to the entries of the glossary in which all word forms used in Van den vos Reynaerde are listed with a selection of line-numbers and meanings. The concepts of the semantic fields and the structure in which they are arranged have been derived from the thesaurus; headwords have been translated into English. In a number of cases cross-references between related semantic fields have been added.

It should be stressed that we have compiled an index, not a thesaurus. It does not in any way aim at an exhaustive presentation. The wide mesh used for the net of concepts spread over the Middle Dutch of one single text here allows all kinds of linguistic fish to escape. As was mentioned earlier, meanings listed in the glossary that do not occur in Van den vos Reynaerde are not found in this index. For example, AFSLAEN has been listed only under 1.9.1 Cut on the basis of the meanings cut off, behead. The other meanings (shorten, deduct, etc.) are not found in Van den vos Reynaerde, and have been ignored for that reason. Finally the index, like the glossary, is limited to single words. The meanings of more or less fixed expressions and compounds have not been included ('guldijn waerc', 'ontweghet sijn', 'mate es tallen spelen goet' etc.) In spite of all these restrictions we hope that users will appreciate this index for one important advantage: as a result of their assignment to broad semantic fields words elucidate each other. This may enable us to develop new insights into the language used by Willem.

Bibliography

Only articles, studies and editions referred to in this book have been listed. Other publications may be found relatively easily. For publications in the nineteenth century, see Petit 1888-1910; Teirlinck 1910-1912. For the first part of the twentieth century, see Muller 1942; Muller 1944. For later publications see the bibliographical surveys by R.M.T. Zemel (in Bosch 1972) and by L. Geeraedts (Geeraedts 1980), and the bibliographies of two dissertations (Bouwman 1991; Van Daele 1994). The journal Tiecelijn has been published in Flanders since 1988 (from 2008 as a yearbook). It is devoted to recent rewritings, verse adaptations, iconography and ex-libris art as well as scholarly publications on Reynaert material. International scholarship on European Reynaert texts may be followed through Reinardus. Yearbook of the International Reynard Society, which has also appeared since 1988.
